Hayfield Friends organize to help Penn State's Lehman campus library

People interested in enriching Penn State Wilkes-Barre's library and enhancing its services formed a new group called the Hayfield Library Friends. The new group will help raise money for the library by holding a used book sale, and will assist in complementing the library's holdings by sponsoring a Book-A-Year Gift Program and an Adopt an Art Print Program.

The membership is open to any individual interested in helping Penn State Wilkes-Barre library. "The group got together, in part, because funds to support the library and its holdings have been dwindling yearly," says Joan Diana, head librarian at the campus. The community may borrow from the campus library at any time, said Diana. A children's book collection has been started, and both fiction and non-fiction books are available, including books by local authors and on local history. "The library is a gold mine for local researchers," said Diana. Over 3 million volumes can be accessed within the Penn State system of libraries. Also, volumes can be borrowed from any of the research libraries in the United States including the Big 10 Universities and the Library of Congress.
