Dad wanted performers, Mom said professionals...Anzalones are both

By ERIC FOSTER Post Staff

When the Anzalone brothers were children, each of their parents wanted them to take different paths in life.

"My father wanted us to be professional entertainers," said Ange Anzalone of Dallas. "My mother wanted us to be professionals, in medicine or law."

In the end, Ange and Jim Anzalone have satisfied both of their parents, and themselves.

Ange has a medical practice and his brother Jim, of Lehman, is an attorney.

Outside the office however, they each have a second career, playing folk music with a pop attitude with the Anzalone Brothers and Company.

Much of the Anzalones' material comes from the group The Kingston Trio.

"First of all, I like folk music. What made the Kingston Trio famous is they brought folk music to the point where the average person can listen to it," said Ange Anzalone, noting that some folk music can be hard to listen to if you're not familiar with it.

For example, "Tom Dooley" had been around for decades before the Kingston Trio remade it into the smooth song that catapulted them to fame, said Ange Anzalone.

Ange Anzalone plays tenor guitar and sings harmony and lead vocals, Jim Anzalone plays guitar and banjo and sings many of the

More delay for Jackson Twp. building

By GRACE R. DOVE Post Staff

Another month, another delay seems to be the continuing saga of the Jackson Township municipal building.

Township solicitor Blythe Evans reported at the regular supervisors' meeting Monday, July 6, that he had notified the contractor, Tri-City of Allentown, that it had defaulted on the contract to renovate the municipal building and had 15 days to finish its work.

Evans said that when the 15 days are up, he will notify the bonding company, USF&G, that Tri-City has defaulted on its contract and that USF&G should use the performance bond to pay the subcontractors and have the remaining work completed.

Subcontractors had stopped working on the building several months ago because Tri-City had not paid them for electrical work and installation of a wheelchair lift.

Supervisor Joe Stager had reported at the June 1 supervisors' meeting that Tri-City had filed Chapter 7 bankruptcy and the bonding company would take care of paying the subcontractors and getting the building finished.

Woman pinned in car for 1-1/2 hours after accident

By GRACE R. DOVE Post Staff

Fifty emergency personnel responded to a two-vehicle accident which pinned a woman in her wrecked car for more than one and one-half hours and sent three people to area hospitals Saturday afternoon, July 4, in Franklin Township.

According to the Pennsylvania State Police Wyoming Barracks, a 1985 Chevrolet Camaro operated by Debbie Bowman, 30, of East Franklin St., Shavertown, was traveling east on Ransom Road when it attempted to make a left turn onto Lake Louise Road, colliding in the intersection with a 1989 Dodge Caravan, operated by Jane C. Pope, 28, of West Chester, which had been traveling west on Ransom Road.

Pope, who had been pinned by

Many at lake dial wrong number to call for police

By ERIC FOSTER Post Staff

When Harveys Lake Borough withdrew from the Back Mountain Communications Center on May 1, the borough saved $15,056.

In exchange for the savings, the borough's residents are supposed to call 675-5259 or 639-1690 if they have a police emergency, instead of calling 911. If the police are not in, the call will be forwarded to the Luzerne County Communications Center, which is providing dispatching for the borough at no charge.

However, borough residents are still using the Back Mountain Communications Center by calling 911, even though Harveys Lake is no longer paying for the service. Outside of the Back Mountain someone dialing 911 in Luzerne County will be connected with an operator in another part of the state, who may not be familiar with Wilkes-Barre, let alone Dallas.

William Alaimo, chief dispatcher of the Back Mountain Communications Center estimates that 80 percent of the emergency calls from Harveys Lake have gone to the Back Mountain Communications Center.

"I'd say it's slacked off a bit," said Alaimo. "We're still getting al-

Still at large: Manhunt fails to capture escapee

By GRACE R. DOVE Post Staff

Nineteen year-old Edward Price of Valley View Trailer Park is still at large after having eluded a tracking dog, more than two dozen searchers from five area police departments and a Pennsylvania State Police helicopter in a manhunt through parts of Dallas and Franklin Townships Thursday afternoon, July 2.

Police are still looking for Price, who is wanted on loitering and prowling charges, Dallas Township Police Chief Carl Miers said. Police do not consider Price to be armed and dangerous.

Chief Miers said that Price escaped from patrolmen Robert Jolley and Wayne Miers after the had taken him into custody at his grandparents' mobile home.

Price had been sitting in the rear seat of the cruiser, his leg outside the car's open rear door with Jolley sitting in the front seat and Miers standing alongside the vehicle talking to Price's grandparents, when a report came over the police radio that there was an additional outstanding bench warrant against Price, for failure to appear at the Luzerne County

PLANTER WITH A PURPOSE — Some Harveys Lake folks have put newly installed guardrails around the lake to good use, making planters of the metal knuckles on the ends of the rails.

Guardrail installation finished at Harveys Lake

By ERIC FOSTER Post Staff

If you lose control of your car while driving around Harveys Lake, you now have less of a chance of careening into the water than you did several weeks ago.

The final part of the Department of Transportation's (PennDOT) project to line Lakeside Drive with guardrails has been completed.

According to Matt Collura, PennDOT's Luzerne County Manager, the project has taken four years and cost approximately $500,000.

The guardrails were installed first on the sharpest curves, said Collura, while the most recent sections completed were from Sunset to Point Breeze and from Sandy Beach to Hanson's.

"The first year we went in to install them we got all kinds of complaints," said Collura. "This year, we haven't gotten as much flak as in previous years. The biggest complaints are from fishermen, they have no place to park."

"Our biggest concern there is the safety of the drivers," said Rollie Keisling, PennDOT spokesman. Many of the complaints about the project have been about how they diminish homeowners' view of the lake. At least some people living by the lake have found a way to make the guardrails more attractive, however, by using the curved end sections of the guardrail as planters.
