We're doing fine - we have a good selection of courses.

I'm sure that we have enough, but I wonder if all of the courses are available to all of the students who wish to take them, and how many courses simply exist on paper.

Based on the information that I have, I think that our courses are adequate. Possible we might consider adding more fundamental courses in reading and math.

This is a hypothetical question, which has too many variables to decide immediately.

There must be other ways to cut - we have taken enough from the students. I think that we should ask the P.S.E.A. for reductions in their fringe benefits. We must also cut back wasteful spending and high administrative salaries. As a last alternative only, I would look at courses and activities with low participation.

I would hate to have to cut anything. Academics are the most important part of education; therefore I would have to look at cutting some activities first if absolutely necessary.

It's a good idea, but we don't know how much it would cost. I would need more specifics before making a decision.

As long as it's a set of courses which other qualified students could also select, I'm in favor of it. I don't think that advanced students should be isolated from the other students in one track.

I am in favor of it. The talented students shouldn't be held back; they should receive as much education as they can handle.

I think that the fairest tax should be based on a county-wide property reassessment.

I don't think that anyone wants more property taxes. There must be a change made somewhere.

An earned income tax would equalize the tax burden. Under the present property tax system, only those who own property carry the burden, while those who don't may benefit while not paying for it.

Until I see more information on the mandates, I can't comment. Even the governor doesn't know everything about it.

O.B.E. has its good points and its not so good points. With the continuing cutbacks in government spending, we don't know who is going to pay for O.B.E. and its extras. It almost looks as if the state is trying to ram it down our throats. We must all work together and get meaningful input from the teachers in order to implement it.

I am against the entire program, especially if it might mean an increased tax burden. According to the information which I have read, O.B.E. has already been tested and found unsuccessful elsewhere.

College info night May 3

The Lake-Lehman Field Hockey Parents' Association will sponsor a college information night on May 3 at 7:30 p.m. in the high school auditorium.

Mrs. Florence Finn, faculty member and guidance counselor in the Lake-Lehman School District, will be the guest speaker. She will present an overview of the information parents and college bound students and athletes should have with regard to selecting the 'right' college or university, the required tests, testing schedules, financial aid packages, scholarships, recruiting and interviewing.

All interested parents and students are invited to attend this program. A question and answer period will follow Mrs. Finn's presentation.

Dallas, L-L place in math competition's top ten teams

Top math team winners at the recent annual mathematics competition at Penn State Wilkes-Barre were Abington Heights, Dallas High School and Lake-Lehman High School. About 100 senior high school students participated in the competition sponsored by the Newton Mathematical Society at the Wilkes-Barre campus in Lehman. The contest, now in its fifth year, draws mathematics enthusiasts from a wide area of northeastern Pennsylvania and has gained the reputation as one of the most challenging math competitions in the region. Participating high schools were Abington Heights, Lake-Lehman,
