

Beat the odds under this tent

One of the biggest tents at the auction is the Odds 'n Ends Booth, featuring a variety of good used items to meet just about any need and budget.

It's a great place to begin shopping for items to get started in that first apartment, vacation cottage or college dorm room.

All of the electrical appliances work.

And it's easy on the wallet.

Sybil Pelton, Mary George and Jean Grimes have been hard at work for several weeks sorting and pricing the many items for sale.

"We have some very nice small appliances, hand-made crafts, pretty baskets and Christmas decorations," Mrs. Pelton said.

Toys, games, knickknacks, glassware, jewelry, several oversize stuffed animals and dishes round out the wide selection of odds and ends that people just can't seem to be able to live without.

Children's quilt will be highlight

For several years students at Dallas Elementary School have donated a special quilt made as a class project to the auction.

Mrs. Cathy Flick's class begins working on quilt blocks during the winter, each student carefully stenciling designs onto material under the direction of several volunteer mothers and Shirli Stec of the Back Mountain Quiltworks.

The main theme of this year's quilt is symbols representing each month of the year - shamrocks for St. Patrick's Day in March, a Valentine's Day heart for February and an apple (the fruit, not the computer) for back-to-school days in September.

After parent volunteers have stitched the completed blocks together to form the quilt top, Stec brings it with backing and batting back to the school for the students to tie together.

"We tell the kids that they're making neat surgeon's knots, so some of them like to pretend that they're doctors," Stec chuckled.

Stec, Flick and several volunteers do the final quilting, hand-sewing thousands of tiny, even stitches to hold the piece together.

Recently presented by Flick, Stec and principal Ruth Tetschner to children's librarian Marilyn Rudolph, the quilt will be sold to purchase books and materials for the children's reading room. Last year's quilt raised $400 for the library.
