

Phyllis Mundy says "no" to higher taxes...

When we first sent Phyllis Mundy to Harrisburg to be our state representative, some wondered if a past president of the League of Women Voters could preserve her honesty and integrity in the face of temptations to go along and vote with the crowd. Today, the record is clear that "business as usual" just isn't good enough for Phyllis Mundy.

She said "no" to higher taxes - time and again.

She's said "yes" to business and personal tax reductions (to the tune of some $170 million this year).

She's fought for reform of legislative initiative grants - and made sure that our district has gotten its fair share of state tax dollars.

She's worked hard to make welfare reform a reality.

She's taken the strong business sense she gained as a local manufacturing executive and her special knowledge as a working mother and single parent to Harrisburg.

She's kept her office door open to Democrats and Republicans across the 120th District.

... and "yes" to community needs.
