If you like advertising on cable TV, you'll love advertising in The Dallas Post and The Abington Journal.

Many advertisers have committed to substantial schedules on local cable television channels, and some say they have gotten good results, at least initially. That's understandable. When they first began advertising on cable, they no doubt reached some people who had never before been their customers. And, since television viewers are largely creatures of habit, their ad probably was seen several times by those people.

That's the good news. The bad news is this: Over time, the high frequency of exposure simply piles up impressions on the same audience, and the advertising does little more than annoy the viewer, who doesn't choose to see the ads but has them forced upon him or her. Think about it; isn't that how you feel?

If you want to learn more about how effective the boring old newspaper can be, call or write:
