I match up with are strong and like to push me over."

Obviously, Cosgrove is a role model for the younger players. He always tries to set a good example for them and stresses it's important to put the team ahead of individual statistics.

Cosgrove came up big over the Christmas break. He scored seven of his 17 points in overtime to help Dallas beat Montrose 73-66 in the consolation game of the Crossin Memorial Tournament. His two day total of 38 points and double figures in rebounds landed him a spot on the all-tournament team. Just a few weeks earlier he was presented with the Dallas coaches award at the team's soccer ban-

His favorite moment in a Mounts uniform came in his sophomore soccer season. Dallas came out on top during a overtime shootout to defeat Crestwood for the district title.

"I really played well," said Cosgrove. "That was one of my best games and I made a penalty

When asked if he preferred soccer or basketball, Cosgrove indicated he couldn't make a choice.

"I like whatever I'm playing at that time," said J.P. "What I really like about soccer is the non-stop action, there's no breaks, the clock doesn't stop.'

Imagine that.

Name change

"Steel, PA" for the week. "I can't stand living in Dallas this week," he said. He also suggested this newspaper become "The Steel Post" for this week.

Art Strum called from Pittsburgh Tuesday morning to tell us that Milton Lutsey, the town manager for Dallas Borough, had been interviewed on KDKA-TV in Pittsburgh during Monday's 6 p.m. newscast, and was asked if anything could be done about the name. At least change the name of Main Street to "Pittsburgh Street" for the week, the reporter suggested. He pointed out that Pittsburgh, Texas was changing its name to "Cowboy,

That led to Mayor Paul LaBar being called at 6:15 a.m. Tuesday by someone from ABC News in New York, asking if anything would change in Dallas, PA. "Pittsburgh's too far away from us," LaBar told The Post.

If the local Dallas doesn't change its name, it might cost The Post a sale. Strum, whose wife, the former Karen Lefko, grew up here, and whose in-laws, Harry and Rhoda Lefko, still live on Luzerne Avenue, wants a paper sent to him with a story about the name change. Perhaps this will suffice.
