transferred to other districts and didn't notify us," Rogers said. "I must account for every single student."

"Every summer I get a lot of late enrollments - they come in one or two days before school starts," Farr said. "Each new student requires a lot of paperwork just to obtain their basic information, and new kindergarteners must first be screened. It can be a bit of a headache. We also have a few students who enroll but never show up."

School enrollment figures are vital to a district because they are tied directly to state funding, Rogers said. The state calculates each district's subsidy according to its average daily membership.

Changes in enrollment will also affect busing and necessitate changes in bus routes, said Farr, who is also in charge of the district's transportation.
