Neighbors wary of zone change

By KYLIE SHAFFERKOETTER

DALLAS - The words commercial and rezoning have become threatening for some Dallas residents as an application to rezone in the area comes to light.

The FPC Corporation has put in an application to the Dallas Borough Zoning Board to change the former Dallas Family Practice building, located at the corner of Machell and Sterling Avenues, from "professional offices" to "offices, including commercial, professional and business." The zoning hearing board will meet at 7 p.m. on Nov. 7, at the Gate of Heaven auditorium in Dallas to take action on the changes of use to the property. The public is welcome.

Shea, Shea & Caputo, the law firm that is representing FPC Corporation hasn't commented on possible uses for the building. The lack of information concerns residents.

"Commercial is a dangerous word because we don't have any idea what they have in mind for the building. It's fear of the unknown," said one neighbor of the building who asked not to be identified.

"All the people who live around the building are concerned because they don't know anything about it," said Milton Lutsey, the

Carverton Rd. to be one way

TRUCKSVILLE - Carverton Road will become one way to the east beginning Nov. 13, so that repairs can be made to the bridge that spans Toby's Creek. Pennsylvania Department of Transportation (PennDOT) spokesperson Pat Maguschak said formal detours for cars and trucks will be in effect until mid-December, then lifted until spring before being reinstated to June.

Cars approaching Rt. 309 on Carverton Rd. will be re-routed up Oak St. to Harris Hill Rd. Trucks will have a much longer detour: out to 8th St., up to Mt. Olivet Rd. and then along Hildebrandt Rd. to Rt. 309 in Dallas Township. Traffic off Rt. 309 onto Carverton will not be affected.

Maguschak pointed out that traffic will be allowed to all businesses and the Kingston Township municipal offices throughout the construction period.

Teachers honored..by former students

DALLAS - The fourth edition of Who's Who Among American Teachers includes 29 educators from the Dallas School District, Gate of Heaven School and College Misericordia, selected by former students who themselves have been listed in Who's Who Among American High School Students, or, The National Dean's List, publications which represent 5% of the nation's high school and college students respectively.

"It's an honor to have someone look back and recognize something you did as an important part of their life," says Norine Amesbury, an English teacher at Dallas Middle School. Misericordia occupational therapy instructor Joseph Cipriani added, "to get feedback like that is very gratifying."

I hate to hear a student say 'I can't' when I know they can."

Students were asked to nominate teachers who made a difference in their lives, by helping them to prepare for the future both in and out of the classroom. "I try to show them a light at the end of the tunnel, and give direction to those seeking it," says Dallas music teacher Todd Hunter.

According to Gate of Heaven math teacher Abe Simon, "I try to show that nothing is difficult. I hate to hear a student say 'I can't' when I know they can."

Teachers are also aware of the awesome responsibilities they have, both to the students and themselves. "I try to be a good role model, and put my best foot forward to help as much as I can," says Misericordia instructor Lisa Sunday-Lefkowitz. Adds Misericordia's Karen Walker, "I try to prepare the students for things I know they have ahead of them."

"Being there for students matters a lot," Misericordia physical therapy teacher Stephen Lorusso points out. "I try to make myself as available as possible to help them."

"A teacher's limits are set only by the students' response," says Amesbury. "I don't teach English. I teach people." Adds Lorusso, "When I see a student's eyes light up because I've made contact, that's what it's all about."

"It's one of the nicest things to

Child care class brings teens, tots together

DALLAS - "Hey, guys, where's the lollipops?" asks Tina Taddei. She's one of the last high school caregivers to relinquish her four-year-old partner, Jodi Bartorillo for the afternoon.

"Tina's very concerned about Jodi, who cried the first days of this class," says Nancy Garvey, instructor for this "Child Care and Parenting" class at Dallas Senior High School. Tina says, "She only gets upset now when her parents come back to pick her up."

Mrs. Garvey cites this as an example of the special bonding that has occurred in the first few days of the special class between a high school senior and a pre-schooler.

The class, started 25 years ago by Mrs. Nancy Goeringer (now retired), is part of the home economics department at the high school. High schoolers are paired up with pre-school partners three days a week for an hour and 15 minutes each day. This is the practical arena for their studies of child development. "The program has great community support, the classes all filled up in the first two days of registration," says Mrs. Garvey.

"I'm very excited about the kids this year," Mrs. Garvey says. "They all elected to take this course. And it's very encouraging to see the number of boys who selected this course. The textbook especially emphasizes the father's role in child rearing."

School director not satisfied with vote

By RONALD BARTIZEK

DALLAS - The lone Dallas School Board member who voted against dropping disciplinary action against assistant football coach Brian Brady said Tuesday he still believes the coach's actions were out of line and shouldn't go unpunished.

"I think what that coach did was wrong," Reese Finn said, "and it should not go unnoticed." Brady was suspended with a recommendation of dismissal after a complaint from the parent of a player that his son had been the target of overzealous discipline after missing a game.
