

Penn State celebrates engineers with program

In celebration of National Engineers Week, Feb. 16-22, the Penn State Wilkes-Barre campus will hold an Open House on Wed., Feb. 19, beginning at 6:30 p.m. in the Bell Atlantic Center for Technology building on the campus in Lehman. The free program is open to anyone interested in the engineering field and its educational and career opportunities. High school students who would like to pursue an engineering career and their teachers are especially encouraged to attend.

Highlight of the evening's program is a video of a teleconference broadcast live via satellite that day entitled "Discover Engineering: Engineers Make a World of Difference."

The teleconference video, which will be shown at 6:45 p.m. features a panel of high school students, college undergraduates, and engineering professionals, and provides an interesting insight into the world of engineering.

Penn State engineering faculty will be on hand to answer questions and present hands-on demonstrations in the state-of-the-art engineering labs. Those attending will have the opportunity to sit in on an engineering class.

Also, admissions counselors will provide information on Penn State scholarships and financial aid. Refreshments will be served.

For more information about the Engineering Open House or about the engineering degree programs at the campus, call 675-9238.
