Battle of Wyoming on television July 3

Wyoming Valley was on the frontier and the Susquehanna River was a key waterway as the American Revolution raged on in 1778. Then, as combined British and Indian forces entered Wyoming Valley from the north, the area earned another distinction: site of the largest one-day death toll for the year 1778. The Battle of Wyoming claimed the lives of two out of every three Americans who fought. A half-hour special on the Battle of Wyoming produced by VideoGuard productions, Forty Fort, will air on Fox 38, July 3, 219 years to the day of the actual event, at 10:30 p.m.

Robert Mischak a Lake-Lehman elementary teacher, as Col. Nathan Denison; Beth Chambliss as Betsy Denison; Florence Howanitz as Mrs. Johnson and Rev. Lawrence Reed of Harveys Lake as Rev. Jacob Johnson.

Told through the dialogue of skilled reenactors who portray colonial figures regularly, "The Battle of Wyoming" attempts to recreate the mood of the day and the events leading to the decision to fight the British and Indians. The home of Col. Nathan Denison in Forty Fort was used as a location. Re-creating the "Fort of the Forty" in Forty Fort from which the patriots marched was another logistical hurdle in the production. Fort Delaware in Narrowsburg, New York, was used as the 'stand in' for the Forty Fort.

Producer Bill Bachman says the entire project is made possible by the program underwriters including: Cook's Pharmacy, Denison House Advocates, Luzerne National Bank and the Pennsylvania State Education Association.

Copies of the program will go on sale at the Denison House on July 4, from 11:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.
