

Writers read works at Author's Tea

Third-graders at Wyoming Seminary's Lower School, Forty Fort, recently held an "Author's Tea" for parents, grandparents and friends. Students read stories and poems which they had written about their studies throughout the year. Works covered such diverse topics as butterflies, holidays around the world, Native American culture, and famous African-American leaders. Each student read his or her work and displayed art related to their writing. Wyoming Seminary third-grader Stephanie Wallace, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Wallace of Shavertown, reads to the audience during a recent Author's Tea.

Radio Club help us communicate with people throughout the entire course. They help make our event successful."

Two of the most obvious health risks for competitors are drowning and heat related injuries and there are many health care professionals who volunteer their services. "We've got a group of EMT's, doctors and nurses who work at the finish line to help people battle the heat," said Harris. "At the lake, we've got 20 canoes and two motor boats on the swim course as well as an ambulance on either side of the lake."

Volunteers handle traffic control throughout the bike and run sections of the course. "The roads are not closed, but they are controlled by volunteers to provide safety to the competitors," explained Harris. "We cover every major intersection on the course and if we have enough volunteers, we cover the secondary intersections as well."

Volunteers also serve at water stops and in transition areas between the swim/bike and bike/run portions. "The competitors appreciate our volunteers," said Harris. "We have a lot of competitors come back here year after year. That wouldn't be the case if we weren't putting on a good event."

In addition, many of the volunteers are repeat performers. "Our volunteers know they're important and they're treated well," said Harris. "Every racer knows that they must be polite to the volunteers. You can yell at a race official and you might get disqualified, but if you yell at a volunteer, you won't be welcomed back next year."

This year, Harris expects 300 to 350 individual competitors along with 70 teams and 20 professional participants. Individual prizes are awarded by age group and sex with the top male and female finisher earning $2,500.
