nated, Rome said it would be impossible to do. "There will always be dead spots. There is no such thing as 100 percent radio coverage. We believe what we're doing will be better than what is being done today.

In early discussions of an Enhanced County 911 system, the new $1.25 per phone line charge was to help pay for Mobile Data Computers (MDC), which were to be put in all emergency vehicles so that directions and instructions could be faxed directly to responders. Rome said the abolition of the Department of Community Affairs (DCA) ended that Recently, 911 was put under the PA Emergency Management Agency, which determined that no part of the $1.25 could be used for the MDC. The money is currently used for phone systems, fixed radio systems and salaries. "We still want the MDCs, we just don't know where to get the money to pay for them," said Rome.

Kingston Township police chief, James Balavage, anticipates the county 911 will work well and hopes the quality of communication currently enjoyed by police is maintained.

"There will always be dead spots. There is no such thing as 100 percent radio coverage."

Day of honor

The Jackson Township Fire Dept. Ladies Auxiliary held its annual Memorial Day observance Saturday at the fire hall. The ceremonies included civic and military segments. Below, Rev. Ronald Cease of Valley View Union Chapel presented a spiritual message. At left, Dusty Rhodes, president of the Lake-Lehman High School band, played "To The Colors" during the military ceremony. The firing squad consisted of Sgt. Charles Fino, SPC. William Dutzar and PFC. Philip Losito.

With all this excitement, you might think the message of staying drug and alcohol free is lost, but the sixth graders seem to get "The carnival is so people don't get addicted and die of drugs,' said Cheryl Ross, 12. "We learn not to do drugs and what they do to you." Cheryl agreed with her friend Val Thompson that it helped to hear about drugs from teenagers.

Chris Bower, 12, frankly summed up the girls comments when he said, "We don't listen to old people."

booth. "I decided to do this for the kids. I think being around older kids influences them. They look up to us," she said.

Junior Chris Crawford said the carnival makes the message fun. "It's good to get them while their young," he said. "We would've liked something like this (when we were younger)."

All the prizes handed out, such as pencils, toy planes and fuzzy animals, tell the winners to just say no to drugs and alcohol.

Baranowski said it's not just the younger ones who learn a thing or two. "The high school students create and design each booth. They also have to fill out an extensive application and get their teacher's permission," she said.

Jon Korbeil, junior, said "We learn how to deal with younger kids." He also mentioned that he enjoyed showing kids that there is always something else to do besides drugs.

Barnowski said local fire stations, such as Lehman Township Fire and Ambulance, bring their fire trucks for the grade schoolers to see. Also, the United States Army provided large tents and Hot 97 radio provided music.

The high school plans to improve the event every year.
