Mis program receives accreditation

The Radiography program at College Misericordia was recently recognized as an outstanding program by the profession's national accrediting agency. The Joint Review Committee on Education in Radiologic Technology (JRCERT) awarded the program the maximum accreditation period of eight years this fall, said Dr. Elaine Halsey, program director and associate professor of radiography. Since 1987, the program has received two of the committee's maximum awards of five years' accreditation, she said. Tara Dymond, a junior radiography student from Shavertown, practices venipuncture on an artificial arm as Robert Comello, assistant professor of radiography at Misericordia, observes. Venipuncture is one of many skills Misericordia radiography students develop as they complete their studies.

ID program at Lake-Noxen

Lake-Noxen Elementary students recently participated in an identification program with the Pennsylvania State Police. All students received an ID booklet which contained emergency information, safety tips, and an instant photograph. Shown with Officer Joseph Lakkis, from left, 2nd grade students, Roxanne Erdman, Abigale Nalbhone, Amanda Kocher, Justine Martine.

John Rosser receives PSU Faculty Outreach Award

The Penn State Wilkes-Barre Award for Faculty Outreach was recently given to John Rosser, a physics instructor at the Wilkes-Barre campus. This award was established by the External Affairs committee of the Penn State Wilkes-Barre Advisory Board to reward a full-time faculty member who, through outreach activities such as instructional programming applied research or outstanding service, has established a link between the University and individuals, organizations or communities. Rosser, a former Penn State Wilkes-Barre student, holds an associate degree in Electrical Engineering and a Bachelor of Science degree in physics. He returned to the campus in 1990 to oversee operations of the Friedman Observatory and opens the facility to the public every Wednesday and Friday night (weather permitting). He hosts private and school groups by appointment and opens the observatory for special events such as comets, meteor showers and eclipses. When the comet Hale-Bopp passed in 1997, an estimated 500 people a night visited the campus. Rosser also has made learning astronomy fun for children attending Penn State Wilkes-Barre's Summer Youth Camps for the past three years. A $500 scholarship is designated in the winner's name to be awarded to a deserving student in the 1999-2000 year. In addition, the winner's application from each campus will be submitted for the University's Penn State Award for Faculty Outreach which offers a $1,000 cash gift.
