First Union christens new area office

First Union Bank celebrated the grand opening of its new Back Mountain Financial Center Saturday. Executives of the bank joined the branch staff and local dignitaries to put a stamp of approval on the 4,000 square foot, $1.5 million facility.

Scott Fainor, First Union Regional President, welcomed customers to the new "state-of-the-art" facility, which includes eight teller stations, four drive-through lanes plus an ATM lane, and offices where financial specialists help customers navigate the maze of modern financial management. Perhaps the most unique feature is the oversized television sets set behind the teller counter, tuned constantly to CNN or CNBC and carrying the latest stock quotes.

"We are pleased to have this attractive, modern office in Dallas," Fainor said. "We are committed to being a leader in this community and look forward to serving our customers here." The full-service facility offers complete banking service for individual or business customers, including mortgages and loans, traditional savings and certificate plans and other investment options.

During his remarks, Fainor said that local First Union employees had ranked in the top 25 of 2,600 East Coast branches for customer service. The local branches scored 6.94 on a scale of 7, in surveys of customers. "The score was customers telling us that we deliver on their financial needs," Fainor said.

The Back Mountain Financial Center was designed by Little & Associates, and built by Sordoni Construction Services. It consolidates the former Shavertown and Dallas Borough locations. An existing branch at the intersection of Rts. 118 and 415 remains open.
