LEHMAN - A familiar face will be missing from Lake-Lehman classrooms, gyms and fields when school resumes in September. Rodger Bearde, who has worn the hats of athletic director, coach, teacher and more since 1977, died suddenly June 23.

While best-known as boys basketball coach and athletic director at Lake-Lehman High School, friends and co-workers recalled Bearde as a man of great character who set the tone for a strong program that taught more than athletics.

RODGER BEARDE

John Oliver, now the high school principal, gave an illustration of Bearde's impact. Lake-Lehman has a tradition of inviting successful graduates to speak at commencement, and several of them have been former basketball players. "To a man, after they have mentioned their parents, they have thanked Rodger Bearde for making them what they have become," he said. "This is, I think, a real testimony to what he did at Lake-Lehman."

Joseph "Red" Jones first met Bearde about 30 years ago, when Jones was coaching basketball at Catholic schools in Plymouth. Later, Jones served several terms on the school board.

"We lost a very good and decent man," he said. "He truly was a credit to his profession, the school district and his family."

Jones's two sons played basketball for Bearde while they were Lake-Lehman students, and one of them, Bill, will deliver a eulogy at a memorial service to his former coach. Bill Jones served as assistant to Bearde for a time, and was one of many former students who stayed close to their mentor.

"He was quite the counselor," said Oliver, as he described how Bearde would take time to talk to former students who were going through difficult times. In the end, Bearde's influence showed. "He taught them to be disciplined, leaders and goal-oriented," Oliver said.

Bearde had a volatile personality on the sidelines as boys basketball coach, but at the end of the game, he was the first to congratulate opponents and for-
