

'Tryals of the Salem Witches' roles open to general public

The Institute of Public Affairs at Luzerne County Community College is inviting interested members of the community to participate in both speaking and non-speaking roles in the upcoming production of "Tryals of the Salem Witches."

The program will be a dramatization of the Salem witchcraft trials of 1692.

Fred Walters, director of the institute of public affairs at LCCC notes that members of the cast are being recruited during the summer and asks that persons who are interested in participating contact him as soon as possible.

The program will serve to reveal the incredible political, social, religious, military, and economic issues involved with the trials in a dramatized and thoroughly accurate manner. The program is based on official court transcripts and other historical documents.

For information, or to register to participate, contact Fred Wilson at fwalters@luzerne.edu or call 740-0424.

Laikis speaks to Dallas Lions

Trooper Joseph Laikis of the Pennsylvania Police was the guest speaker at a recent meeting of the Dallas Lions Club. Trooper Laikis, who is stationed at the Wyoming Barracks, provided the club with a historical review of the state police who were formed in 1905 as the first such unit in the country. Presently, there are over 4,000 troopers; of which 200 are women who are involved in all phases of police duty.

Shown presenting a certificate of appreciation to Trooper Laikis is Lions President, Dr. Jay Tanner.
