New Media courses offered in October at Misericordia

When College Misericordia received a Link-to-Learn grant from the Pennsylvania Department of Education earlier this year, one major function of the grant was to help the College develop programs to meet employers' needs for a workforce well prepared in computer technology applications. As a result, beginning in the fall semester, among the new programs available at Misericordia will be a series of certificate courses in New Media Development, e-Commerce, Web Design and Web Development. The programs are specifically designed for students who want to prepare for working in web-based commerce.

Students who have some of the skills required for that program can earn credit for that knowledge through the development of a portfolio that demonstrates that they met all of the required objectives of the course. The introductory skill set and all of the four certificates can be earned by successfully completing forty-two academic credits.

The program is designed to enable students who complete three introductory courses to achieve from one to four certificates by building on the competencies acquired in the previous New Media

In order to offer a student the highest level of flexibility in achieving the certificates, every course in every certificate program will be offered on line, beginning in October. Plans are also under way to develop a bachelor's degree program in New Media, according to Dr. Mary Glennon, RSM, vice president of academic affairs and Dean of the College.

For information about the New Media certificate programs at College Misericordia, call 674-6195.
