

Jessica Martin playing the very merry Mary Widdoe Ilbredde with special guest Buddy Omalia from the Plymouth Rotary Club.

Jessica Martin playing Mary Widdoe Ilbredde explains to Joan Martin that this is the ninth time she has been widowed by a very wealthy man but that she was not named in the will.

Paul Saxon tries to get a few clues from Phil Hoover, Hunter Avlines, about who murdered Iman Ilbredde.

Duncan Whitehead plays the role of Lord Diamend Digby as he tells guests Spencer Martin, Joan Martin and Robin Stredny his account of the evening's events.

Mystery

scene complete with a chalk outline of the victim and the murder weapons. After the rules of the game were explained, it was time for guests to find which character was the murderer and for someone to claim the super sleuth award for the evening. Each character sat in a different area ready to tell what they knew about the murder and who they suspected.

As the guests tried to solve the murder, they met the likes of Carver Raire, a French chef who is as famous for his soufflé as his subterfuge, played by Carry Freeman and Lord Diamend Digby, a British aristocrat heir to the great Digby diamond fortune, played by Duncan Whitehead.

As guests visited each character they began taking a stab at solving the crime. Was it Mary Widdoe Ilbredde (Jessica Martin), young, lovely and a widow for the ninth time, or was it Will Grubber (Nick Stredny, Jr.), the distant nephew and only living heir to the Ilbredde fortune? Solving the crime meant coming up with the three m's - means, motive and murder. As the mystery unfolded and the crime was solved, many guests were surprised to find who killed Iman Ilbredde.

At the end of the evening, Robin Stredny took home the super sleuth award.

has lived at the Meadows since April 1997.

Mrs. Martin has one son, Frederick, who lives in Albuquerque, New Mexico. He served in the Navy as a meteorologist for 42 years. She has three grandchildren, Stephen, John and Elaine. Her son, who is spending the week with her, gave some insight into his mother's life. "She was a prolific quilter in her day," he said. "She loved to do quilting at the church with her friends, and she would often quilt at home by herself. She must have made several hundred quilts in her lifetime. She liked to travel all over the United States. Now she enjoys receiving visits from her family, church women's group, and former students."

During the birthday celebration, Jamie Stott, general manager of the food service department at the Meadows Assisted Living facility, presented Mrs. Martin with a birthday cake from the women's group at her church, and led the singing of Happy Birthday in her honor.

When all of her friends were getting ready to leave at the end of the party, Mrs. Martin thanked everyone for coming and asked them to come back again next year to celebrate with her. "I had a wonderful time," she said.

The family, led by her son Fred and grandson John, had plans for yet another celebration later in the day at a dinner party in her honor at Pickett's Charge.
