Companies now make available many of the slides, glides, and other components similar to those found in parks.

Made specifically for residential use, they are manufactured to the highest standards by the same company who makes the commercial parts used in park playgrounds.

The idea is to allow people be creative in building their own “custom” play sets — and could even be a great family project.”

based Rockler Woodworking and Hardware include a 10-foot scoop slide; a roped glider; combination trapeze and ring; telescopes and periscopes; steering wheels; and even the popular climbing wall panels and “fun ride deluxe” that allows children to zoom across an expanse of yard.

In addition to the play set components, there are non-toxic shades.

These not only create a colorful structure, but help protect the wood as well.
