The wheels on the bus went round and round, and round gain for more then seven hours when 37 students and six chaperones from Dallas High School recently went to Massachusetts on the American Literature Field Studies trip.

For longer then she'd care to admit, Mrs. Eleanor Buda, an English teacher at the high school, has taken the ALFS club to Cape Cod and Nantucket.

"Becoming truly educated is what happens to a person beyond the formal classroom," said Buda. "An educated person may acquire some basic skills in school, but does not demonstrate his educated personality in school, but everywhere beyond school. So it is time for us to establish educational opportunities for young people outside the physical structures of school buildings. That way we can make our efforts in school practical and productive in American and global society," she added.

The trips originated years ago when her American Literature class expressed an interest in visiting the places they read about in works such as Herman Melville's "Moby Dick."

'We sometimes refer to our bus as a classroom on wheels; we mean that in the sense of learning taking place actively, progressively," said Buda. "Our education is in motion, and we take ourselves to places previously unknown to make abstract ideas from the pages of books come alive to enrich our existence forever.'

Every year the group visits historic sites such as Plimoth Plantation. At this living museum role players assume the lives of the original settlers.

"I felt the replication of the them squatter's rights. plantation at Plymouth was the most educational part of the trip," said Adam Morgan. "Not only did we learn facts about the place, the people and the time period, but we got a good idea of what it was like to actually live there and interact with the people. The role players' accents were very believable, and they always made sure not to talk about things that happened after their time.

Students also visited the Pilgrim Monument in Provincetown. After climbing over 100 ramps, they were treated to a panoramic view of the cape. From the monument, they left on a 4x4 tour of the dunes and the site of the actual first landing. Many artists maintain cottages in the dunes. They moved there for the peace and solitude and the government granted

Students boarded the aptly named M/V Whalewatcher at Macmillan Wharf and went to sea on a whale watch. After a few hours at sea, they encountered several finback whales.

They also traveled by ferry to Nantucket Island. "Nantucket is a quiet, peaceful island, with breathtaking views," according to Mike Yurchak.

Nantucket was at one time the whaling capital of the world. Nantucket whalers went as far as the South Pacific in search of sperm whales and the group visited exhibits at the Whaling Museum attesting to this. On Nantucket they also saw one of the areas oldest churches, from whose steeple they saw most of the island.

Nantucket's historic section also possesses that rare and endangered treasure, a pharmacy soda fountain, where students experienced the joys of a vanilla coke.

The bus ride home was broken up by a stop at Mystic Seaport. This is a museum of America's maritime history. Its exhibits are seaworthy sailing vessels including the Captain Morgan, the last remaining wooden sailing vessel and the very one Herman Melville shipped on before writing "Moby Dick."

Finally returning to NEPA, the voyagers were physically tired, glad to see their families, but sad that it was over. Great friendships are formed when traveling. These remain, but some of the comradeship can only be attained when you are out there.

KINGSTON TWP. - Kingston Township Supervisors had a number of questions during their regular meeting on July 11 regarding the purchase of a new pumper truck by Trucksville Volunteer Fire Company.

Questions concerned an action item on the agenda regarding an agreement required by Internal Revenue Service (IRS) regulations for the purchase of the new vehicle. The township, which is under no financial liability for the new truck, has to complete IRS paperwork to validate the fire company's and township's tax exempt status.

The new pumper truck will cost $283,000, and the fire company is paying $56,000 of the cost from its truck fund, said Chris Yankovich, treasure for Trucksville Fire Company. He said the remaining balance will be paid for through low interest loans. As part of the loan application, the fire company needs to file the IRS paperwork. The supervisors moved to pre-
