would happen," Boris said. "They really only knew through the grapevine what was being said."

In a letter to the Lake-Lehman teachers, school board members and administrators, Boris and Gina Coombs, the vice president of the student council, called the teachers, administration and students "the Lake-Lehman family" that "has traditionally been very close." They said they were concerned many senior traditions, including the senior class trip, Class Night, the prom and the National Honor Society ceremony, would be "broken" with students "left as victims."

However, after meeting with Superintendent Roberts, Boris feels very reassured. "After speaking with him, I know what is happening, and I know what is going on," Boris said.

Twelve representative members of the student body, including student council, senior and junior class officers, met with Roberts in the high school auditorium last Friday to try to get some answers and put to rest their concerns that students would suffer. "We discussed with him all concerns and questions that the student body at Lake-Lehman had," Boris said. "He was extremely helpful and sincere about informing us with the correct, up-to-date information."

As for actual conditions and the atmosphere at the school,

Boris said everyone is getting along and all senior activities are going on as always. "Adjustments are still being made and some things are different, but everything is happening as in past years with the students," she said.

Advanced Placement class reviews, normally held before school in preparation for the AP tests that allow advanced placement credit in some colleges, have been incorporated into class time. "It's actually working out better," she reported. "For a lot of kids it's tough to get up that extra half hour early."

Other activities also are occurring within the school day. The teacher in charge of Class

Night, a tradition held the night before graduation, is contracted for the activity and will be able to organize it under the union's guidelines. Boris said the only difference this year was that seniors would not be able to practice all together with their advisor after school. At Class Night, "each senior is introduced for the last time," Boris said. "It's the last night we are together as a class. It's nice." All high school students and parents are invited.

No problems with the senior picnic are foreseen. The junior class is making preparations for the prom and all class trips have adequate volunteers from the parent organizations, administration and school board members according to Roberts.

Boris said she has received positive responses from a few school board members, talking to them by phone and in person. "The teachers and school board members have been extremely helpful. Everyone is getting along," Boris added. "Neither of them want the students to be in the middle of it and really the students haven't been pulled into the middle. It was just a first impression."

Boris said board member Angelo DeCesaris praised her representation. "He was very nice," she said. "He said it was good to hear what was going on in the school and what we are thinking."

Boris added the decision by the teachers' union to cease all activity before and after school "seemed drastic" at first but the students can see now that a few days have passed that "the relationship between the teachers and the school board members is still strong" and has not resulted in any unprofessional behavior. "It's just a legal matter," she said. "It's not necessarily a problem with their relationship. Both sides have been very helpful and supportive. They are helping students in any way possible."

"As of right now," Boris concluded, "teachers and administrators are doing their best to not involve students and so far it has been working."
