Zoning

event we'll actually have a decision on the 1979 zoning appeal some 20 years later." In an update to the two waste tire pile properties, Malak was authorized by the board to write a letter to the project manager at the Department of Environmental Protection expressing the supervisors' objections to the use of taxpayer monies in disposing of the tires. The 20,000 tires on the Manzoni property are in the process of being removed to the Apex facility for shredding. "The board does not think that this is an appropriate way to spend taxpayers' money. Rather the board believes that some sort of lien or penalty should be imposed on those to require them to take some responsibility for the accumulation of so many waste tires." The owner of the other tire pile, Raymond Malak, has removed about 8,000 to 10,000 waste tires from his property on Chase Road to his junkyard on Pinetree Road. The township in its letter, impressed upon DEP that "accumulating and storing of junk tires at the Pinetree Road property is still a violation of the Solid Waste Management Act. It is apparent that action be taken by DEP against Mr. Malak because Mr. Malak is allegedly now disposing of the tires by burning them in a fireplace on the adjacent property." The letter went on to say, "Such pollution is harmful and threatens the health, safety and welfare of all the citizens in Jackson Township. Moreover, the Malak junkyard now contains an incinerator with no permit." Representative Phyllis Mundy has been in contact with Jackson Township in reference to the tire piles. "She is really concerned, especially now with the West Nile Virus and the deaths in Louisiana," said solicitor Jeffrey Malak. In other business: • The township has incurred over $500 in engineering fees from the Durkin subdivision since the fall, said township secretary Henry Zbiek. Although the Durkin costs must be written off as a learning experience, the township can realize a significant tax savings by passing an ordinance making the developer of any future sub-divisions liable for those costs. "The township is eating those expenses and I think the board believes that the applicant or the developer should be the one to bear that cost," said Malak. • Voluntary recycling will be available to Jackson Township residents by September through an arrangement with Exeter Borough. Residents will be able to bring their aluminum cans, newspaper, cardboard and plastic recyclables to the township municipal building for drop-off. Recycling coordinator Karen Szwat, who works with seven other area municipalities, presented the program to the supervisors and residents last month. Some details remain to be worked out, but informational flyers will be distributed to every household in the township.
