Donald L. Glickert, an Edward Jones investment representative in Dallas, recently was named to a select group of individuals who voluntarily train new brokers in their communities.

Glickert has been tapped as a "field trainer," a new position created for those investment representatives who voluntarily give their time and energy to help their new colleagues succeed. Those investment representatives who are named field trainers receive certification through training sessions and testing. Field trainers work with groups of new Edward Jones investment representatives for several months to help them through their training while they build their businesses.
