the organizer for all of those.

"We organized competitons, slalom courses and ski exhibitions"says I.J. Hosey, Boris's boyhood friend. "But we started to ski right here in the cove. He had a little rowboat and we would take turns towing each other around the cove with his mother watching from the dock." The love of summer skiing continued the rest of the year when Hosey's wife, a 4-H ski club organizer, won a weekend skiing trip to Killington,

"Buddy came up that weekend and said 'Get one of those condos next door for me, too'." They then skiled winters together in Vermont as well.

His work with domestic violence victims earned him an Outstanding Service Award in Kingston in 1998 and last summer he traveled to Brazil to

PENNDOT urges drivers to slow down with school opening

Next week, school bells will be ringing all over Northeastern Pennsylvania, signaling the eturn of students to classrooms. For that reason, PEN-NDOT is urging drivers to slow down when traveling in and around school zones, school crossings and school buses.

Moreover, state and local police will be strictly enforcing Pennsylvania's School Bus Stopping Law which mandates that when the red light is flashing on a school bus and the side stop at least 10 feet behind the on Pennsylvania roads.

means the bus is getting ready stop. Drivers should then slow down and not attempt to pass the bus.

Persons convicted of violating Pennsylvania's School Bus Stopping Law face stiff penalties including a 60-day suspension of their driver's license, a $100 fine and have five points assessed on their driving record.

Persons convicted of speeding through a posted school zone face a fine of $93 plus three points assessed on their driving record.

PENNDOT Traffic Engineer Bob Kretschmer noted that although there are rigid penalties to deter some from unsafe driving in and around school zones and school buses, the precious cargo being carried by the school buses should be the impetus for safe driving.

"Persons driving through school zones or near a school bus should be extra alert because the safety of the children on that bus is in their hands," Kretschmer stressed. He pointed out that each school day, more than 1.5 million children stop arm is out, drivers must are transported by school buses

"Even though many drivers When drivers see yellow may pass through the same flashing lights on the bus, it school zone every day on their way to work or other destinations, it is important they remember to reduce their speed for the entire length of the school zone," Kretschmer stat-

> While drivers must take steps to insure the safety of students on school buses, parents can take steps as well. Parents should remind children frequently that if the child cannot see the bus driver's eyes, then the bus driver probably cannot see the child.

PENNDOT offers these additional safety tips to parents:

• Make sure children arrive at the bus stop five minutes early and do not run to the bus.

be able to see them.

· Students should be aware of the DANGER ZONES - the front, sides and rear of the bus where the bus driver may not

• If a student must walk in front of the bus, he or she should walk well in front of the long yellow stop arm. If the bus is not equipped with a front stop arm, students should take ten giant steps ahead of the bus before attempting to walk in front of it.

• If walking along the side of the bus, students should take three giant steps away from the bus to insure being seen by the Children should never walk behind a bus.

· Children should never try to reach or go under the bus. If the child has dropped something, he or she should tell the bus driver. If the bus has already started to roll, the child should leave the item where it is. The item can be replaced. A child cannot be replaced.

 Check to insure there are no drawstrings, straps or key chains hanging from children's clothing or backpacks. Drawstrings and other dangling items can get caught on the bus rail or in the bus door.
