and the trails association never occurred.

Tom Dombroski, owner of the adjoining clearcut land, said he previously owned part of the area the trail is on. He said the township owned the other part.

"I gave up my rights to that, to the township," he said. Dombroski contends that the township now owns the entire trail.

Kozick said, however, he has no written record of the transaction.

"He's got to turn it over officially, said Kozick. "Write a letter and turn over a deed to the property."

Wagner, Kozick and Dombroski have all said public use of the trail is fine with them, however none of them claims ownership, and thus the authority to grant access.

"We told anybody that wants to, they could use it," said Wagner. He light-heartedly followed up the statement by saying, "Although, I can't say yes or no; it's not mine to say."

Tupper said he has a hard time understanding how the township doesn't know who owns the trail. "I can't understand why they don't know. I don't know why nobody wants to claim it."

Tupper still walks the trail as he has for years, although it's not nearly the same, he said, since the trees have been cut down.

He thinks the wooden, hand-carved sign is a nice addition to the trail's entrance, though. "It's a beautiful little sign," he said.

"And she heard him holler, stop!" Evelyne Balara put the brakes on Frosty (Denise Swida).

Denise Ogurkis, as the evil magician, put a spell on Hocus Pocus (Diane Gordon).

Frosty comes to Trucksville town

This year, Frosty the Snowman paid a visit to the children of Trucksville Nursery School, courtesy of The Parent Enrichment Group, whose members mounted the play December 4 and 5.

Diane Gordon and Michelle Maransky directed the skit, which was adapted by Lori Colacito. The cast included Denise Swida as Frosty, Danielle Answini, Kelly Vespico, Jenine Finarelli, Denise Ogurkis, Dennis Gochoel, Diane Gordon, Chris Mathers, Sue Irvin, Laurie Krakowski, Nancy Romanowski, Andrea Karkutskie, Michelle Maransky and Evelyne Balara. Sharon Cosgrove served as usher and Suzanne Dudeck made Frosty's costume. The stage was designed and built by Lorraine Jarden, Lisa and Irene Krivak, Robert Gordon, Stephen Mathers, Norman Latoski and Denise Swida.

bleak. "There's not a lot of financial room to put more projects on," said Doble.

He said his office should know within the next three or four months if the project has made it through the funding hurdles.

If funding is awarded by the state it would mean PennDOT would look at all possibilities for the intersection. In the end, the best alternative would be chosen, roundabout or not, and construction would begin in 2006 or 2007, said Doble.

He said he believes the project's chances of being funded are favorable.

"It's not written in stone, but it does have a lot of support."
