

Lake-Lehman

Class Valedictorian Steven Cardillo and Salutatorian Sara Chmura both expressed their gratitude to everyone who had helped them along the way. "I can honestly say," said Cardillo, "that I will miss nearly as many faculty members as classmates. And believe me, I'll miss a lot of classmates."

Senior high school guidance counselors Bonnie Gregory and Diane Sherman read the names of the seniors as they proudly approached school board president James Mahon to receive their diplomas, enormous smiles plastered on their faces. Some were simply overcome by the moment and cried tears of joy.

After the ceremony, the graduates, now officially alumni of Lake-Lehman, had a chance to be congratulated by family and friends outside the stadium.

A sense of accomplishment and joy could be felt just from being around the grinning, ecstatic graduates.

Ainsley MacDougall said she had worked so hard to get to this point in her life, and although she was happy and proud to have graduated, she said "in a sense, it's bittersweet," because of all of the memories and friendships she has made throughout her school years.

Lauren Lipski proclaimed that graduating high school is "somewhat indescribable. I feel so many mixed emotions. It really hasn't hit me yet, that I'm a graduate of Lake-Lehman."

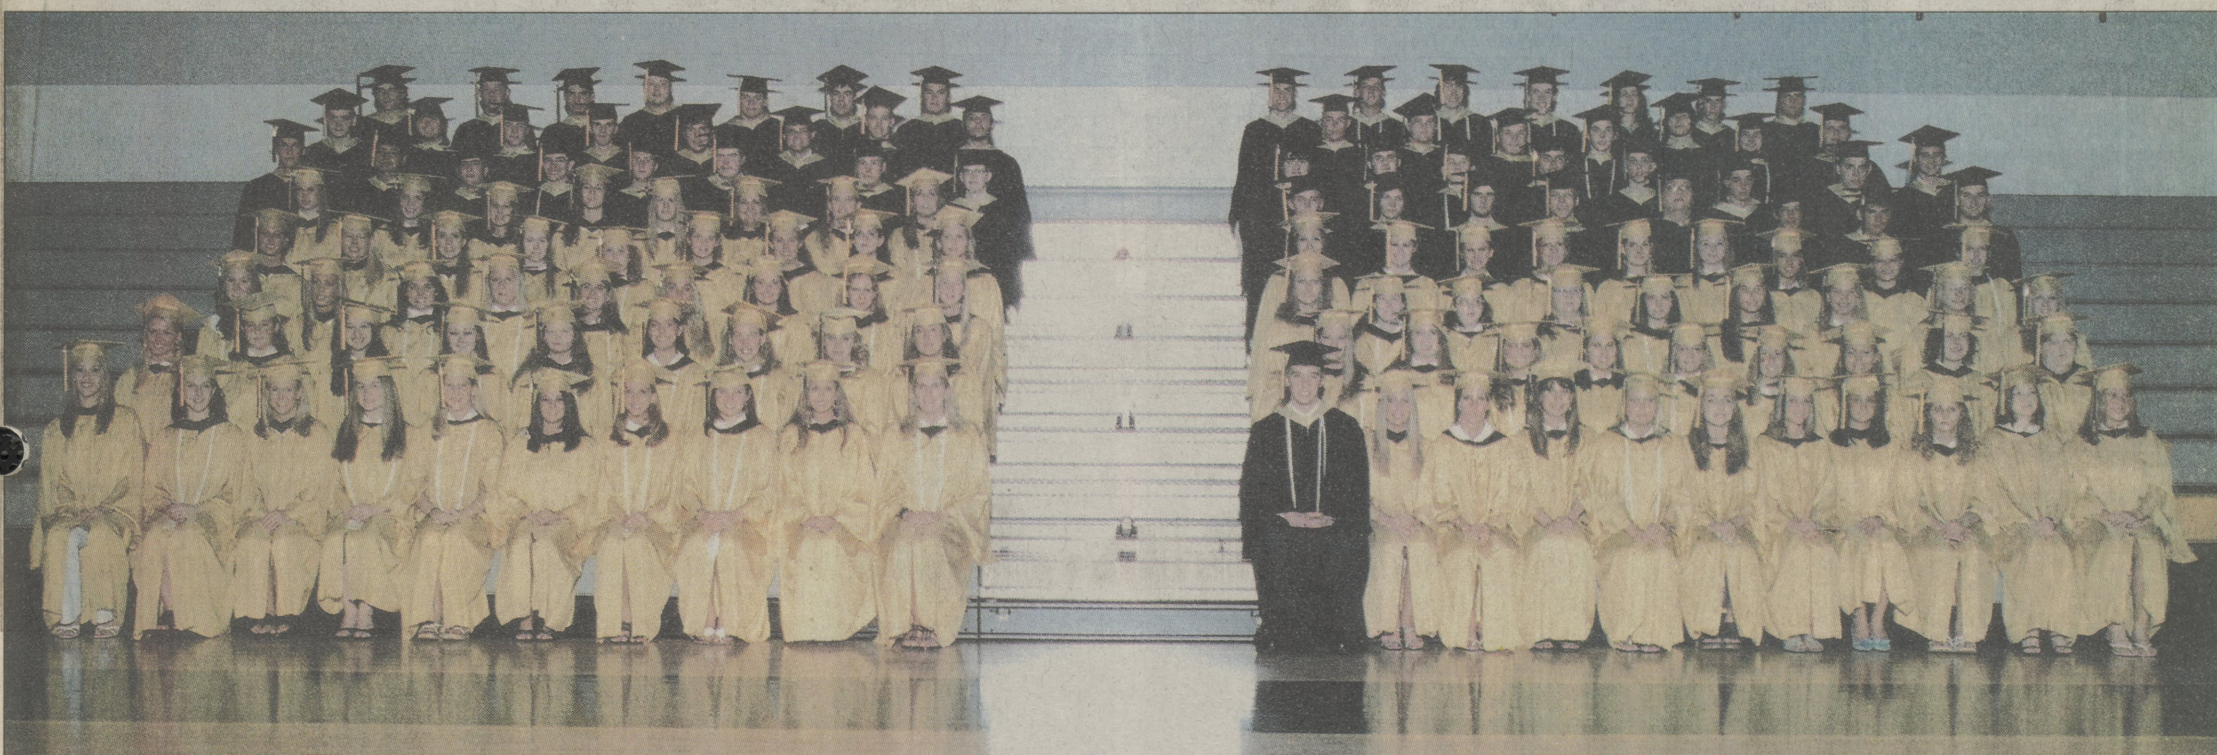

Some of the graduates, however, were nothing but happy to be new alumni. John Paul Hanish, always quick with a joke, exclaimed, "I worked 13 years for a little piece of paper?" A grin spread across his face and he kissed his diploma. "It's finished. I'm done with high school."

Whether happy or sad, having mixed emotions or not knowing what to feel at all, each of the 148 graduates was indeed done with high school. They will never again grace the halls of Lake-Lehman High School. As Robert O. Roberts put it, "This class is leaving a hole in the Lake-Lehman community, a hole that will not be easy to fill."

Lake-Lehman graduation scenes, clockwise from top left: Dressed in the caps and gowns, Sarah Chappell, Michael Zimmerman and Matt Mahoney sat with the band for the last time; Cory Spencer shared a light moment with Ainsley MacDougall, Samantha Payne and Jim Sorber; Adrienne Dragon wiped away a tear while talking with Jasmine Watson; Barbara Cragle held the door as Carol Jones and Melissa Strunk stepped across the threshold that would take them to graduation; guidance counselor Diane Sherman helped Kim Sorber with her gown.
