For third year, Misericordia caps enrollment

College Misericordia has placed a cap on freshman enrollment for the third consecutive year. No new applications are being processed for full-time freshmen expecting to start in fall 2004. Transfer students may still, however, apply for fall.

"We remain committed to our promise of personalized attention at College Misericordia," says Dr. Michael A. MacDowell, president. "Therefore, it is essential that we manage our incoming group of first-year students carefully, while still providing access to as many as possible."

As of June 9, College Misericordia expected an arriving class of over 320 first-year students, bringing its total full-time enrollment to over 1,420 students. Both numbers match the college's freshman and overall full-time enrollment goals for this year.

In fall of 2002, College Misericordia welcomed a record incoming class of 350 freshmen, and in 2003 capped freshman enrollment at 320. Not affected by the temporary cap are prospective part-time students, graduate and undergraduate, as well as transfer students and adult learners in Misericordia's accelerated EXPRESSWAY program, which is launching a new degree in Health Care Management for fall 2004. Full-time transfer students who are academically eligible will also be accepted.

Many openings exist for part-time study at Misericordia's Dallas campus, and Expressway sites for the master's degree in Organizational Management. The cap does not affect enrollment for spring 2005. For those still interested in full-time enrollment for fall 2004, the Admissions Department will keep a waiting list in the event of withdrawals.

Students interested in fall 2005 enrollment can attend the next on-campus open house on Saturday, August 7, 2004.
