Director of Game Commission NE Region honored by trappers

Barry Warner, Pennsylvania Game Commission Northeast Region Director, recently was named Conservationist of the Year by the Pennsylvania Trappers Association for his efforts to promote trapping and furbearer management.

"Barry Warner has certainly gone beyond the call of duty to promote trapping, trapping opportunities, youth involvement, research, regulation changes and conservation programs involving furbearers," said William Kalinauskis, Director for District 9 of the Pennsylvania Trappers Association. "As Region Director, Barry played a significant role in reintroduction efforts involving river otters. Populations of this furbearer species has shown both impressive growth and range expansion."

Rod Zullinger, Pennsylvania Trappers Association president, also praised Warner's relationship with the state's trappers and furbearer biologists, as well as his firsthand knowledge and experience as a long-time trap-

"Barry continues to fight for proper furbearer management trapping opportunities throughout the state. His devotion to and enthusiasm for trapping and furbearer conservation are superior and commendable."

A graduate of the 15th Class of the Game Commission's Ross Leffler School of Conservation, Warner was assigned a district in Bedford County in 1973. He accepted a transfer to Juniata County in 1978, and then was promoted to the Bureau of Law Enforcement in 1984.

In 1987, Warner was named Northeast Region Director, where he is responsible for all Game Commission information and education programs and law enforcement activities in the agency's 13-county Northeast Region. He also oversees the habitat improvement projects and all other land management activities on more than 366,155 acres of State Game Lands in the re-

A native of Red Lion, York County, Warner is a life member of the Pennsylvania Trappers Association, National Trappers Association, Fur Takers of America and National Rifle Association.

Teaming up to support the Back Mountain Food Pantry

The Kingston Township Raiders and the Dallas Mini Mounts junior football teams held a community food drive on August 22 at the first game of their 2004 season. All players, cheerleaders, family members and friends from both teams were asked to bring nonperishable food items to the game and place them in the large shopping carts near the entrance to the Mountaineer Stadium. More than two cartsful were collected by half-time. The food pantry provides food to more than 150 children and youth in the eight Back Mountain communities it serves. Lori Monk, Raiders president, and Dan Anderson, Dallas Mini Mounts president, helped the children organize the event as a community service project. Pictured from left, kneeling: Jim Bopp.
