FOR THE POST/CHARLOTTE BARTIZEK

HISTORY

two years. Rood was also the Laketon postmaster until 1937 and passed the store on to his son, Ben Rood.

After renting the store from owner Bill Purcell, the Truskas bought the store, living in a small apartment upstairs and, with help from Taft's sister Josephine Evans, owned it for 37 years.

"When we started, we would throw the fat, bones, and whatever out the back door with some Clorox and a truck would come to pick it all up. Then the Environmental Protection Agency started coming around and we had potato, meat, and candled egg inspections."

The couple didn't think inspections were bad idea, but the added work load forced them to eventually sell the store in 2004.

A fire in 1986 gutted the store and everything had to be thrown out. The old wood paneled ceilings and walls were replaced.

"In a way it was kind of funny," says Margaret Truska. "The clock melted and ran down the wall."

But the fire never dampened their spirits and the Truskas enjoyed the store and the community they served for four generations.

"We got to know them all real well, their troubles, happiness, just like in any small town," says Margaret.

Dallas resident Sheri Metz, one of the present owners, points to a small corner of the store where the Laketon Post Office was located.

"The post office even built an addition onto the store to expand itself."

Metz owns the store now with two partners, Beth Ann Delancy and Bob Youells. Metz, who is the most active partner, has kept many of the old traditions in the store, but has also added propane tanks and lottery tickets.

Last week Joe Wynne of Harveys Lake came in to buy soda, lunch and a $16 in lottery tickets. He won $100.

"It's not the first time, this store has good tickets," he says.

Five-year-old Molly Loughney of London recently went to check out the "tomahtoes" and lollipops while visiting her grandfather Tom Loughney.

Metz admits she was a little intimidated at first.

"I've calmed down a bit, and learned some things, too."

RESCUE

more involved and maybe take the next phase. It's a different kind of training. I don't want to say it's difficult, but it's challenging.

"You learn that you can fight the elements, but can't fight Mother Nature."

Especially when it involves moving water, says Perugino.

"Moving water is very dangerous," said the member of the Shavertown Volunteer Fire Co. "I have video of 2-3 feet of water moving a cement mixer. Rescuers need to understand dynamics of moving waters."

Perugino says there are different ways to conduct a water rescue, including talking the victim into a self-rescue, devising a way to throw a rope to the person and pulling him to shore, and a boat-based rescue.

And, as a last resort, going into the water.

"Go rescues are the most dangerous," he said. "The rescuer is putting himself at risk."

Dodson says the training is even more beneficial to mutual-aid companies, like Kunkle.

"We do a lot of assisting with Harveys Lake," he said. "Now, we have even better training if we're needed to help them out."

Perugino will be conducting water rescue training for emergency responders and the general public from 6:30-10:30 p.m. Sept. 20, 22, 27 and 29 at the Breslau Fire Co. in Hanover Township. There is no cost to attend the classes, but all participants must have their own personal flotation device and helmet.

"You never know what could happen," said Perugino, a former fire chief in Harveys Lake who resides in Dallas. "It's very good training to have."
