FARRELLS DISPLAY COLLECTIONS AT LIBRARY

The Farrell family of Dallas has put its various collections on display this month at the Back Mountain Memorial Library on Huntsville Road in Dallas, Hudson, an 8-year-old third-grader, is displaying his Lego creations. Six-year-old Alyssa is displaying her carousels, gifts from her parents and grandparents. And 5-year-old Cameron helped his father and brother to put together a collection of Denver Broncos souvenirs. Alyssa is a first-grader and Cameron is a kindergarten student. The Farrell children are home-schooled. From left are Hudson, Alyssa and Cameron Farrell.

MOMENTS IN TIME

The History Channel

 On Jan. 23, 1849, Elizabeth Blackwell is granted a medical degree from Geneva College in New York, becoming the first female in U.S. history to be officially recognized as a physician.

 On Jan. 26, 1905, at the Premier mine in Pretoria, South Africa, a 3,106-carat diamond is discovered. The "Cullinan," the largest diamond ever found, was cut six months later. After nearly shattering the diamond on his initial attempt, the mine manager satisfactorily divided it with his second blow - and promptly fainted.

 On Jan. 28, 1937, the prototype of the Rolls-Royce Wraith made its first test run. Following World War II, the first model was called the Rolls-Royce Silver Wraith, and it became the principal luxury sedan sold by Rolls-Royce for decades to come.

 On Jan. 29, 1958, creating one of the most enduring of Hollywood marriages, film stars Paul Newman and Joanne Woodward wed. The couple became politically active, and Newman was appointed by President Jimmy Carter to serve on a United Nations Conference on Nuclear Disarmament.

• On Jan. 25, 1961, reading a prepared statement from a podium in the State Department auditorium, President John F. Kennedy becomes the first U.S. president to hold a live televised news confer-

• On Jan. 24, 1972, after 28 years of hiding in the jungles of Guam, local farmers discover Shoichi Yokoi, a Japanese sergeant who was unaware that World War II had ended. Yokoi, left behind by the re-Japanese forces, went into hiding rather than surrender to

American forces • On Jan. 27, 1985, the Cold War couldn't stop one of the stalwarts of capitalism, Coca-Cola, from setting up shop behind the Iron Curtain. Coke announced plans to sell its all-American soft drinks in the

STRANGE BUT TRUE

 A funeral in Lyon, France, was attended by many mourners, including Jacques de Putron, a friend of the deceased - and a ventriloquist who decided to use his talent to cheer up the grievers. In a moment of stupefyingly bad judgment, Putron threw his voice, making a cry of "Let me out!" come from the coffin. Due to the shock, the deceased's widow, Claudia Sassi, collapsed and died on the spot.

 Author Kurt Vonnegut is probably best known for his novel "Slaughterhouse-Five," which was published in 1969. Vonnegut himself called it an anti-war book. But he also said, "Anti-war books are as likely to stop war as anti-glacier books are to stop glaciers."

 If you take a look at the state of Florida on a map, you can't help but notice that it's got quite a bit of coastline - 1, 800 miles of it, in fact. That's nothing, though, compared to Alaska: The northernmost of the United States has 6,640 miles of land along the sea. And that's not even counting the shores of the state's roughly 1,800 islands - if you add that in, the grand total is a whopping 33,900 miles.

• French carmaker Renault must have used some creativity to come up with the names for some of its models: The Kangaroo Express, the Twingo, the Traffic and the Clio Saloon were all marketed

 "If you look like your passport picture, you're too sick to travel." The author of that quotation remains unknown, but you can bet that he or she was a seasoned traveler.

 Try to wrap your mind around these numbers: A typical cargo fuel ship can carry 600,000,000 pounds. Its anchor alone weighs 17 tons.

Thought for the Day: "Critics search for ages for the wrong work, which, to give them credit, they eventually find." - Peter Ustinov (c) 2006 King Features Synd., Inc.

OLIVER BROTHERS BUY FATHER'S FIRM

Kenneth and James Oliver, sons of the late James R. Oliver, one of the outstanding automobile men in Northeastern Pennsylvania, have formed a partnership and purchased the interest of the James R. Oliver estate in the business established in Dallas by their father.

The firm will shortly open a new building at the corner of Market and Goodwin Streets in Kingston where it will continue to distribute Hudson Motor cars. It will also continue to maintain its retail outlet and garage in Dallas.

Dallas Township High School will begin a magazine sales campaign next week. The commissions which the school will refirst in the Back Mountain area. Two years ago a movie projector was bought by the youthful salesmen.

Although the meat supply here is below normal, local meat dealers and restaurant owners believe it will last for another week is Back Mountain housewives continue to be as fairminded as they have to date. There has apparently been no rush of buyers to stock up on choice cuts of meat or grab the last pieces on display.

CRIME WATCH STARTS IN KINGSTON TWP.

Kingston Township officials gathered last Thursday to mark the dedication of a newly-created Neighborhood Crime Watch program at Sunrise Estates in Trucksville. The program is first-ever organized subdivision of the six that exist in Kingston Township. Under the direction of crime watch coordinator Harold Shelly and sector coordinator Chet MacMullen, residents of the committee meet once a month to obtain information and discuss problems they may be experiencing.

Whenever mention is made of the State Correctional Institute at Dallas, most people think of prisoners serving time for crimes for which they have been convicted. But not this time. This time, the prisoners are spending time doing something good for the community.

This past week, inmates made positive news by participating in two worthwhile projects. For the first time, inmates of the "Lifers" association - all of whom are serving life sentences - worked with local Scouts in the buying Thursday.
