Mom's presence in play

Josh and Jesse Reese prove mettle since her death.

DALLAS TWP. — Teina Foell no longer sits in the bleachers at the Dallas High School boys volleyball games, where she loved to watch her two sons play for the Mountaineers.

But Josh and Jesse Reese can still feel their mother's presence during the games, more than three months after the 54-year-old lost her battle with cancer.

Foell passed away Feb. 2 from the effects of colon, liver, and ovarian cancer that was diagnosed in October 2004. When she died, the volleyball season was just a few weeks away.

"I can feel her around me the night before a game and I'll talk to her before every game," said Jesse, a 17-year-old junior. "I can feel her giving me energy during the game. I know she's there."

Josh says he never contemplated not playing during his senior season.

"There was no way I was going to miss it," said the 18-year-old. "My mother loved watching us play."

The Reese brothers have been playing inspired volleyball since the death of their mother, said Dallas head coach Mike Williams. The two players are a major reason the Mountaineers are in the thick of the District 2 playoff race.

"I'll be honest, I didn't know what to expect from our team this season," said

Josh and Jesse Reese warm up before a recent match against Lake-Lehman.

Williams. "But once I saw the determination and motivation in these two guys, I knew we could have a very good season. Josh is a rah-rah kind of a guy, and Jesse is quiet and laid back. But they're both playing very well."

Josh has taken his game to new heights, said Williams. The coach was so impressed that he unexpectedly named Josh — who is averaging nearly 20 kills a game — as one of the team captains.

"He's been great," said Williams. "I think Josh has established himself as one of the top five or six players in the league. He can play on any team in the league. Before the start of the season, I didn't see him as our captain. That's not a knock against him. He's really taken control of the team. He's become a great leader."

The brothers watched their mother maintain a positive attitude during her battle against cancer. That spirit remains alive in her sons, says Josh.

"She taught us to never complain and to keep our heads straight," he said. "Even when she was sick, my mom never told us she was going to die. I think she was trying to keep us strong. She knew (the eventual outcome) but she never told us. My mom always wanted us to do the best we can, in volleyball and in school. We might not be the greatest volleyball players or the best students, but we try our best."

And they have a special relationship. "We have our own kind of brotherly love," said Josh. "We argue, but we take care of each other."

Added Jesse: "Mom wanted us to be good people. She was a great person."

Williams has been overwhelmed by the attitude of the Reese brothers, who live in Dallas with their stepfather Ken Foell.

"I have nothing but respect for these two young men," he said. "It could have been easy for them to say, 'I lost my mom, I'll do drugs' or 'I lost my mom, so I'll drink.' They've been able to keep their heads above water."

"To lose your mother is difficult. To lose her when you're in high school is incredible. You want her to be there for games. You want her to see you graduate. She would have loved to see the way they're playing this season."

Despite losses against Lake-Lehman and Bishop Hoban earlier this week, Dallas can clinch a berth in the playoffs with wins against Wyoming Area, Crestwood, Meyers and North Pocono.

"At the end of the season, I just hope everyone is happy," said Josh. "Our team is very close. We play with the most emotion of any team in the league. I think about my mom every day. I know she'll be there with us."

And she'll be smiling, added Jesse. "I think she's very happy with our season," he said. "She knows that we're doing our best."
