space conservation.

The dollars flow from the Department of Conservation and Natural Resources' (DCNR) Community Conservation Partnership Program.

The North Branch Land Trust, headquartered in Trucksville, focuses its conservation efforts on the watershed lands that frame the North Branch of the Susquehanna River and on Northeastern Pennsylvania's lands that comprise its agricultural heritage.

At the end of 2005, the last year for which data are available, North Branch Land Trust was ranked sixth in number of acres protected in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania (5,600 acres). When these two easements are completed, the Land Trust will have more than 8,000 acres protected.

Oliver said, "We accomplish our mission by helping landowners think through possible options and uses of their land. We are not an anti-development organization; we are a pro-responsible development organization. The Land Trust accomplishes its conservation mission primarily by helping landowners place legally binding, conservation agreements on their land."

"Typically, these agreements are donated by the landowner, and the federal government encourages such donations through the tax codes," Oliver said.
