Recent vandalism at Bicentennial Park, or "Tot's Lot," in Dallas Borough is evident on this plastic picnic table which was likely melted by a flame. Vandals have repeatedly damaged the two recreation parks in the borough and officials are asking residents and passersby to call 911 if they see suspicious activity in the parks.

Changes in the ordinance also prohibit dogs and the use of tobacco, alcohol, and skateboards.

The Kenneth A. Young Memorial Park is the site of the borough's summer recreation program for about 100 children ages 5 to 12. It is also host to other borough events such as the annual Easter egg hunt.

The repeated criminal damage comes at a time when the borough is looking to revitalize the Kenneth A. Young Memorial Park. A master plan for construction of a new park is in the works and Carr says the borough is looking at ways to incorporate vandalism deter- Rebecca Bria, a staff writer, may rents. security cameras, motion lighting, tables connected to the ground by concrete and garbage cans permanently fastened into place.

"I think one of the biggest things that would help is neighborhood participation, neighborhood people watching and letting us know what's going on," Carr said.
