Back Mountain fire companies conduct fire safety classes at Dallas Elementary School

Dallas Elementary School students were treated to a fire prevention/education smokehouse program on October 8 and 9 outside the elementary school.

Individual classes were greeted and informed about ways to escape a burning building and practice fire drills in their own homes.

The children were then split into small groups with some seeing Franklin Township's fire engine and its equipment, others looking at and feeling the protective clothing worn by firefighters to keep them safe while others started the tour of the Smokehouse. This learning tool on loan from the Nanticoke Fire Department is a two-story mock home equipped with living room, kitchen and bedroom. The school children were escorted through and asked to point out fire and safety hazards.

The highlight of the tour was the students encountering a smoke-filled bedroom where they learned how to get out by staying low and crawling under the toxic smoke and gases of a real fire. This realistic simulation teaches children to stay calm, feel for heat, have two escape routes and quickly exit a room where visibility is poor at best.

Maureen Oremus, assistant chief of the Franklin Twp. Volunteer Fire Co., coordinated the event and was assisted by firefighters from Franklin Twp., Dallas, Kunkle, Trucksville and Jackson Twp.

Members of the freshman class of Dallas High School will sell tickets during Thanksgiving weekend to benefit Community Care for Kids (CCK). Selling tickets, at $10 each or $25 for three, to benefit CCK is one of two community service projects the class will conduct this year.

Members of the freshman class of Dallas High School will sell tickets during Thanksgiving weekend to benefit Community Care for Kids (CCK).

Selling tickets, at $10 each or $25 for three, to benefit CCK is one of two community service projects the class will conduct this year.

Susan Collini, who, with her husband, Dr. Francis Collini, founded CCK, met recently with members of the Freshman Steering Committee and told them a volunteer group of medical workers travels to Ecuador every year to perform surgery on children born with birth defects.

Officers of the Dallas High School freshman class are Briana Konecke, president; Chloe Alles, vice-president; Danielle Spencer, secretary; Marcus Wagner, treasurer; and Francois Ross, marketing agent. Mrs. Yvonne Mould is class advisor.
