WHY WINTER TIRES BELOW 45°?

Elk Mountain winter tires are designed to deliver safety and control in snow, ice, and cold weather conditions. Many people think that all-season tires can deliver the same performance, but this is not true. All-season tires use very different compounds to deliver better wear and good traction in a wide variety of conditions. However, the trade-off is a decrease in traction in conditions below 45° Fahrenheit. The Rubber Manufacturers Association (RMA) has set a new standard for winter traction that is explained in detail below.

Winter tires have special tread compounds that use one or more of the following features to deliver improved traction:

- "Soft studs" tread fibers that "bite" like metal studs yet are quiet and do not harm the road.
- Elk Mountain winter tires retain their flexibility even in the coldest temperatures (A more flexible tread surface equals more traction and control.)
- Elk Mountain winter tires use silica-based, micro pore compounds (or comparable technology) that are used to bite through the water film to increase snow and ice traction.
