Resident debates ownership of access road leading to launch

A vacant council seat was filled, a police emergency notification system was installed and a debate over who owns an access road leading to a boat launch erupted during Tuesday night's borough council meeting.

Council members unanimously approved Ryan Doughton, a Democrat, to fill the vacant council seat previously occupied by Charles Musial who resigned from the position. Doughton is a municipal engineer who has worked frequently with Dallas Township, Lake Township and Lehman Township.

Other appointments made were: George Gwilliam to the vacancy board, Mayor Clarence Hogan and Council Member Larry Radel as tax collectors, Council Chairman Francis Kopko and council member Richard Williams III to the emergency management committee and Kevin Novackowski to a five-year term with the General Municipal Authority.

Police Chief Dan Evancho announced a new system called nixle.com has been installed at the police department. The Internet system allows residents to register their e-mails or cell phones with www.nixle.com to receive live updates on emergencies.

This allows officers to send warnings, right from computers in the cruisers, notifying registered residents of a missing child, an accident on Route 415 or any other emergency, Evancho said.

Concerns over access to a boat launch located across from the former Hanson's Amusement Park were voiced by resident Geri Bevan. She feels an access road used by many boaters and the Fish Commission may be in jeopardy by the recent purchase of property by Ken Williams.

Williams is proposing to develop the land into a townhome development called Villas at Waterwood. The access road used by many may be closed, Bevan said.

"If the development claims the access road and closes it from the public, it only leaves one boat launch left," She said.

Borough Attorney Charles McCormick said, through his research on the access road, he found it was never owned by the borough or by the state. He believes the road may have been used by the original owners to access different parts of the property.

Bevan found a deed stating it was a public access road and does not want to see Villas at Waterwood claim it and close it off from the public.

"People have been using it for years," Bevan said. "Have you asked PennDOT?"

Chairman Kopko said it is not the responsibility of the borough's attorney to research it any further. He said McCormick was asked to find out if the access road was owned by the borough and the answer is no.

After the meeting, Bevan said she was not happy with the attorney's findings because she doesn't think it is right to take a road that has been used for years by the public and make it private. She will seek other avenues to resolve the problem.

In other news, Hogan announced plans for this year's Harveys Lake Homecoming Weekend are formulating and said Homecoming Weekend dates are August 6, 7 and 8. He added that committees are now forming.

The next meeting of the Harveys Lake Borough Council will be at 7:30 p.m. on Tuesday, March 16, in the municipal building.

Supervisors approve new liquid fuel forms filing system

During Wednesday night's supervisors meeting, a new system for filing liquid fuel forms was approved.

Supervisors approved a resolution to use PennDOT's grants system to file liquid fuel annual forms.

The resolution also states Vice Chairman Amy Salansky and supervisor Robert Grey are authorized to execute all documents necessary to support the agreement.

PennDOT's grants system is just a method of filing annual reports concerning the liquid fuels allocation given to the township by the state. The liquid fuels fund is money given to a municipality based on road mileage. The money is used for to pay costs associated with road maintenance, vehicle fuel and road crew payroll.

In other news, tax collector Donna Kocher said the tax bills will be sent out later than usual this year due to "issues with the county budget."

"They should be going out no later that March 1," she said.

The next supervisors meeting will be held at 7 p.m. on Wednesday, March 10, in the municipal building.
