Baker voices opposition to 'forced pooling'

State Senator Lisa Baker will vigorously oppose efforts by the natural gas industry to gain the power referred to as "forced pooling."

Industry representatives have identified pooling as a primary objective they are seeking to achieve during the debate over a severance tax.

Across the Marcellus Shale portions of Pennsylvania, there is a lot of acreage potentially available for deep well drilling. Certain sites may be more attractive to drillers, but no single site is essential.

According to Baker, people should not be forced by state law to accept drilling beneath their property if they do not want it. Such a requirement is not right, Baker says, is not necessary and is not acceptable.

"There are a variety of good reasons why an individual or a family would choose not to sign a lease and we should respect those decisions," Baker said. "The economic interests of gas drilling do not override the fundamental rights of property owners. There is no public purpose that could justify taking people's property rights."

Baker feels that, under a system of forced pooling, only the gas companies win. She further states that there is a misconception that this change in law would adversely affect just the property owners who do not want to lease their lands. By giving the companies the ability to compel some instead of having to negotiate with all, Baker says, forced pooling would diminish the value of leases for every property holder.

Baker would prefer that Pennsylvania decide the question of imposing a severance tax on its merits, without trading away people's rights.

GDAC plans informal meeting

The Gas Drilling Awareness Coalition (GDAC) will host an informational meeting for all interested residents of Dallas and other communities at 7 p.m. on Wednesday, Aug. 11, at the Dallas United Methodist church, Parsonage Street.

The evening will include a presentation by Gas Drilling Awareness Coalition founder Dr. Thomas Junta and a question and answer session. Informational materials will be available. The event is free and open to the public.

"We organized this meeting at the behest of the Dallas Township supervisors who indicated that they needed more information about gas pipeline and gas drilling in their community," said Junta. "We appreciate their openness to this important issue, which has the potential to forever change the landscape of our beautiful home."

The Gas Drilling Awareness Coalition consists of Luzerne County citizens concerned about horizontal fracturing, called fracking. The goal of GDAC is to protect local communities and the environment.
