nance due to the passage of House Bill 1950 in the state legislature.
The bill, signed into law last week, updates the Oil and Gas Act of 1984 and one aspect of the law is to remove land-use controls from local governments.
Brennan said the ordinance amendment passed in October, which set detailed regulations on natural gas and oil development in the township, would need to be scrapped. He suggested the supervisors work with planning consultant Jack Varaly in the creation of a new ordinance.
Brennan added that agreements made with natural gas companies do not apply to the new law. Last year the township negotiated two agreements with Chief and Williams to specify terms for their pipeline and metering station projects.

The board also heard from resident Kerrie Anderson, who has been trying to prove that the township owns her street, Skyview Drive, for the last three years.
The street is part of New Goss Manor and Anderson said the township road department does not plow snow or complete maintenance on the roadway, though she believes it is part of the township.
She said it is a dangerous situation for her family. She also said she has documents to prove the street is owned by the township.
The board had tabled a decision about what to decide in Anderson's circumstances at its last meeting, but Brennan said the board decided Tuesday that the road does not belong to the township and, therefore, is ineligible to receive service.

Anderson said she will continue to fight the decision through legal actions.
In other news, the board ...

herself vocally.
"She wanted to dance, but was too afraid to perform, so she decided to sing," said Jaclyn Mosley. "I couldn't believe it."

Kendall enjoys singing because it's a way to "express (her) feelings and send a message through each song."
Jaclyn is glad there are venues like Trinity Presbyterian Church for performers in the community because it's a very "family-oriented" way to spend an evening.

Winners of the first annual Back Mountain Has Talent show were awarded gift certificates to Leggio's Italian Ristorante, Grotto Pizza at Harveys Lake and the Ranch Wagon.

RIVALRY

Though the Lake-Lehman group is small (there are 16 swimmers and two divers), Edkins said the team is full of talent and potential.
Stretanski noticed a difference in the Dallas team after it began using its own pool.
"It gives them a comfort level and confidence," he said of the young swimmers. "They feel secure and they know where they're going. It's a big help for the kids, and that's why we're all here."
Junior Lake-Lehman swimmer Samantha Sabol, 17, of Shavertown, said using the Dallas facilities has made life as a competitive swimmer just a little bit easier.
"It was hard to schedule practice and meets when we were at Misericordia because we had to work around their schedule," she said. "I swam here (at Dallas) when I was younger and this is my favorite pool. I think we have more people coming to the meets, too, because the benches are bigger."
Edkins said having a pool built at the junior/senior high school in Lehman Township is just a dream, but the current situation is working well and she hopes it will continue in the future.
"People are cooperating with it and we're so grateful for the support," she said.
Edkins also said the long-standing rivalry between Dallas and Lake-Lehman still exists, but the teams are more like friendly foes.

"I don't think that will ever go away, but we still figure out how to get along in the long run," she said.

residents Diane and Steve Thompson, who are engineers.
"Engineering is something I've considered as one of the career choices I might want to look into," he said.
Adams enjoys math and is also considering careers in architecture and teaching.
"Mr. Thompson talked about how many kids go in choosing one section of engineering but may end up switching to another," he said. "It just shows you can go into something and figure things out and it ends up being different than you thought - you have to keep your mind open."
Adams realized the kind of education he needed to be an engineer and what specific skills are required for the field.

He said the presentation made him more inclined to pursue the field because he knows what it's all about, though he admits he's still undecided.
Senior Josh Shilanski, of Shavertown, chose to attend the dentistry speaker program with Dr. Duane Sprau of Clements Dentistry because he's always been interested in becoming a dentist.
He said the speaker program only reinforced his desire to enter into the field, and Shilanski ended up learning more about the career as a result.
"This actually provided the most information out of everything I've done," he said. "It gave insight on what he went through to become a dentist and what he goes through on a daily basis as a dentist."
Jones said 17-year-old Shilanski has been accepted to Temple University in Philadelphia, which has "a very reputable dentistry program."

Seventeen-year-old Megan Redlich, of Dallas, is one of Dallas High School's "tech gurus" under the advisement of technology director Bill Gartrell.
As a lover of technology and art, Redlich thought it would be worthwhile to attend the video game art and design speaker series with Dallas graduate Joseph Stachnik. Redlich wants to pursue a career in digital animation.
"It inspired me more because of the sort of things (Stachnik) does and what he works with," she said.
Redlich plans to attend a school in Florida after graduation. She said the speaker program only increased her passion for the field.
"It's always more helpful to hear something firsthand than to read it somewhere, and it's always a confirmation of things," she said.
