82-year-old from Dallas. "Hours-long practices felt like minutes." Bonomo, 48, of Colonial Park, is another honoree still practicing skills formed at Lake-Lehman.

He and his brother, Rocky, both won state championships the same year - the only brothers in the state ever to do so. Bonomo also earned a heavyweight title the same year and went on to wrestle at Bloomsburg University, where he earned national recognition.

He now runs a wrestling clinic and coaches the sport at Cedar Cliff High School in Camp Hill.

"It's basically my life," he said. Bonomo said it's the individuality of the sport that makes it interesting - he feels one is dependent on him or herself to win or lose a match.

"It's pretty daring," he said. "And it certainly teaches you a lot about life."

Bonomo is honored to be recognized by the school that supported his interests.

"Lake-Lehman took care of me - I felt sorry for some of my teachers," he joked. "But I don't think there could be a better school that helped me become who I am today."

Eighteen-year-old Bryan Carter, of Sweet Valley, knows a thing or two about the "daring" sport of wrestling.

After recovering from a brain and spinal cord injury incurred during a wrestling tournament his freshman year, he continues to participate in the sport, and will continue wrestling when he attends Ursinus College in Collegeville, Pa. in the fall.

"It took a few months of physical and occupational therapy," Carter said of his recovery. "My left side was stunted and I kept getting headaches."

The injury also inspired Carter's planned major in college - neuroscience and biology.

"If all goes well, I plan to be a neurosurgeon," he said.

Carter was the recipient of the Knights of the Roundtable Scholarship this year and sat just a few feet away from one of his sports heroes during the event.

"My dad has been friends with Ricky and Rocky (Bonomo) for a long time," he said. "They were like my idols growing up. It just shows you the great people who come out of Lake-Lehman."

Superintendent James McGovern, who founded the program and presented the awards, said that is precisely the goal of the project.

"We're inspiring the future by honoring the past," said McGovern. "Their contributions to Lake-Lehman and society prove that great people come from Lake-Lehman, and there's no reason not to continue that tradition."

ice, leadership, honesty and respect. She said the club is responsible for organizing several programs for students throughout the year, including one in honor of Veterans Day.

"We keep in contact with the panel we bring to the school all year long," said Hoidra, the club's president. "We send them Valentines and Christmas cards. We have a summer barbeque coming up. It's about giving them the recognition they deserve."

Weir said plaques have been ordered and money isn't an issue for the project, but the club hopes to have a few more names to be engraved on the memorial by the end of the school year in mid-June. He said the project also has room for expansion, so if more names are revealed after the plaque is displayed, they can be added as well.

"This shows an effort of giving back, to serve those who have served us," said Hoidra.

she said. Tests showed Paul was suffering from radiation poisoning from the chemotherapy.

"The very thing that was supposed to help him was actually hurting him," said Marilyn.

Paul Mizenko died on Jan. 30, 2011 after spending two weeks in a hospice.

Pastor Marc Ramirez, of the Fellowship Church, said Ann Lynn and Paul were such cornerstone members of the church, it was difficult to deal with their deaths while also helping Marilyn in any way they could.

"It had a huge impact on the church," he said of Paul's death. "Ann Lynn and Paul were important members of the church, and many also had a close relationship with Marilyn, and in dealing with loss they also tried to be a help to Marilyn, which was difficult."

Though Marilyn had family members in the area, she and her father arranged for her to stay with the Henning family, longtime family friends of the Mizenkos and members of the Fellowship Church.

"They welcomed her as a daughter," said Ramirez.

After Marilyn's ordeal, her faith in God grew and she became a more active member in the church - emphasis on the word, "active."

"I'm never home," said Mizen-

"Beforehand, I practiced a ritualistic kind of religion, always asking God to prove it if He's real. Well, be careful what you pray for."

She is a leader in the church's youth ministry and does activities like teaching youngsters German, taking art lessons, teaching Sunday School, leading the Bible Quiz team and meeting with other Christian-minded teens from the Back Mountain area every week.

"Beforehand, I practiced a ritualistic kind of religion, always asking God to prove it if He's real," she said. "Well, be careful what you pray for."

Marilyn also works hard to maintain her stellar grades in school, for which she earned a $10,000 scholarship to be renewed for four years to the college she plans to attend in the fall.

She had an interest in biology when she was younger, but now plans to attend Toccoa Falls College in Toccoa Falls, Ga., where she wants to study communications and youth ministry to become a motivational speaker to inspire others.

"It's been amazing to see Marilyn so focused on God and helping others when she should be the one being helped," said Ramirez. "...She has been a great testimony to what it means to have faith in God when things aren't going your way and a tremendous example to us all for serving others while you yourself are in a place where you need to be served."

Marilyn said faculty and friends at Dallas High School have also been very supportive of her as she continues to deal with the difficulties in losing her parents.

"Over my years at Dallas, there haven't been too many scenarios that fit Marilyn's situation," said Dallas Superintendent Frank Galicki. "We have had students deal with loss, but usually there's someone there - another parent. In this case, Marilyn was left on her own. It's just amazing what she's accomplished."

Marilyn said she's become a happier person through it all, and though she still has her typical teenage moments like squabbling with the Hennings' daughter Kayla or having trouble keeping her room clean, she knows she's on the right path and hopes her parents would think so, too.

"People always tell me they (my mother and father) would be really proud of me," she said. "They wouldn't always tell me that - it was just expected of me to do well. I was taught about honesty, integrity and other Christian values, and this is what I am supposed to do."
