what Corey meant to us."

Adams said it was always motivating to see Corey in the stands cheering on his family and his teammates.

"He was like our team mascot. He would always be there cheering us on, supporting us all the way," he said. "It was really cool to see him out there because we knew what he was suffering, but he was always there when he could be."

Marjorie Adams, Jess's mother and Corey's former cross country coach, said she saw Corey transform from a middle school runner into a remarkable young man.

"He was a great competitor and teammate. I admired him so much and it was very hard to watch him go through (cancer), but he carried himself through it so well," she said. "It was amazing the example he has set for our teams, and for everyone in our community."

Samuel said he has learned more from Corey through his experiences with the Ehret family

"I think Corey represents a new definition of what strength is... I've also seen a community show love and support."

than most coaches learn from their players.

"That young man and his family have exhibited remarkable strength and perseverance ... It's unbelievable that these people were able to rise up and meet the extreme heavy burden he was meeting on daily basis, and yet attain the success that they all have," said Samuel. "I'm amazed at how strong an individual he was. I don't know if I could do it myself."

Corey was also an active outdoorsman, and even taught close friend Chelsea Martin, 18, of Dallas, how to fish.

"I've known Corey and his family since we were in first grade," she said. "He, Chris and Brenden are like brothers to my sister, Amanda, and me. We'll cherish all the memories we have of Corey."

Martin said Corey's outgoing personality and ability to overcome whatever life threw his way made him a great friend and an inspiration.

"Corey was a great guy. He loved to talk - sometimes we couldn't get him to stop talking," she said. "He loved to share any information he had about fishing or hunting. He had a great spirit, and I'm really going to miss him."

Dallas High School Principal Jeffrey Shaffer said Corey was "one of those kids it was easy to take an instant liking to," and said his family set "remarkable examples" for the school and community.

"I think Corey represents a new definition of what strength is," said Shaffer. "By watching Corey and watching his family and their situation and in 22 years in education, this is one of the most difficult situations I've seen. I've also seen a community show love and support."
