'Road to Freedom' presented at MU

Misericordia University will present "Road to Freedom," a live multimedia event featuring music and video that highlights the work of those who fought for racial equality over the past 150 years. The program is open free to the public and will be held at 8:30 a.m. on Thursday, Jan. 24 in Lemmond Theater Walsh Hall on campus.

The "Road to Freedom" chronicles the struggles of a courageous group of pioneers who began the fight to end racial injustice as early as 100 years before Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. emerged as a civil rights leader.

Through live commentary, the program tells the story of the efforts of Sojourner Truth, Harriet Tubman, Booker T. Washington, Frederick Douglas, W.E. DuBois, Rosa Parks, Coretta Scott King, the Freedom Fighters, Fannie Lou Hamer, and others who banded together against seemingly insurmountable obstacles to challenge the injustices of racial discrimination and inequality.

For more information, call 674-6400.

camp for the Scouts, reserving the other 50 percent for the family to pay as a commitment on the part of their Scout to attend the camp.

The project became complicated when Hillman realized there were at least four levels of participation at Camp Acahela, a Boy Scout camp in Blakeslee, including a Parent and Pal weekend and a day camp for mothers attending the camp. Hillman was completely invested in the idea by that time and was still willing to assist entire families to enjoy the camping experience.

Last April, Hillman stood before the Scouts and parents of Pack 241 and said, "You don't know me. As a parent, I still look back happily at Scouting and I want to make sure you and your kids go to summer camp."

This year, Cub Scout Pack 241 sent about 40 of its Scouts and their parents to summer camp at Acehela.

Blaise Napierkowski, his brother, Damian, and their mother, Christine, from Jackson Twp., enjoyed the experience.

"Swimming in the cool pool, campfires and the water rockets," Blaise said, recalling highlights of a 3-day trip to the camp with his Mom and brother. Next year would be the year for an all-week trip to the camp for him, he said.

The pack awarded Hillman an appreciation plaque for his generosity.

Sweet Valley, has always been involved in her church's youth group and enjoys being able to discuss her beliefs with her school peers.

"I think this is something that's right," said the track and soccer player. "You don't see this in schools. I like the atmosphere and talking to the same people week to week."

Mahoney likes to reflect on how her faith carries her through different situations.

"You think you have a lot of troubles and bad situations, but if you put God into it, you know it will get better," she said. "It comes out good in the end."

Mahoney said now she can connect with students her own age on the topics she finds most important.

"If people ask me about (my faith), I'll tell them, but a lot of people aren't involved," she said. "But I'm not afraid to talk about it."

Rachel Leskowsky, 14, of Lehman, said her father initially got her involved in the group, but she enjoys socializing and talking about Christian topics with her friends.

"(Christianity) is about having a better life," she said. "I like the idea of eternal life."

Zach Brucher, 15, of Sweet Valley, likes being with people his own age while learning more about God.

"It makes me feel good that I can be forgiven for my sins," he said about his faith. "(In this group) I get to hang out with friends and learn about God. You know (about Christianity) as much as the person next to you," he said.
