Pennsylvania has long required state and local elected and appointed officials, employees, nominees and candidates to annually file financial disclosure statements with the state Ethics Commission, documenting income, certain investments and debts and gifts and hospitality received.

But citizens, good government groups and media looking to review the statements have rarely found access to be easy or convenient.

Senator Lisa Baker is offering a legislative remedy, requiring that the statements be filed electronically and posted online in a searchable format.

The Ethics Commission has for years gone beyond the limited requirements in state law and posted the filings online. Senate Bill 899 makes posting a matter of state law and provides that filings be sorted by name, office, year and amendment. It adds a requirement for amended filings to be attached to the original, so a viewer can readily see what has changed. There is an e-mail notification option for individuals who want to be alerted to new filings.

The bill also includes language requiring state and county political party officers to file financial interest statements.
