Camp

Charlotte Cutler's first husband, Aaron Lisses, was the mayor of the first camp in the 1930s and she spent one summer (the summer of the Agnes flood) as the camp nurse even though she was only a lab technician. The camp's regular nurse was busy helping flood victims.

The camp has had its share of helpers, friends and people who aided it over the years.

In an updated story, a young camper named Zach Kaplowitz proudly holds up a newspaper article he wrote for the camp's newspaper. Zach is a participant in a special part of the camp for autistic children.

He writes, "I've been coming to the camp for more than five years. I love to make things and like learning how to swim.... Camp is great."

Seems like today's campers become tomorrow's friends at the camp.

said items that are auctioned are usually recycled from years' past.

"That ceramic bird statue - I can remember buying that at the penny auction 10 years ago in this very building," he said.

Gina Evans, president of the Evans Family reunion, said she's only been attending the gathering for the past 10 years. The Nicholson resident said when she realized it was an ongoing tradition, she decided to get involved.

"(My husband and I) only knew two or three members of the Evans family, so they were the only ones we knew at the reunion," she said. "Everyone we saw was a stranger."

Now Evans is the key planner of the reunion every year, which is Madeline Rifenberg, right, of Beaumont, cannot recall all the names the many relatives who have attended the Evans family reunion over the years. Her brother Cecil Vopleus listens.

held on the first Sunday in August, and is more knowledgeable about her family tree.

"Once you're president, (the job is) yours for life," she said.

Zarnoch, who works as a student advisor at Keystone College, enjoys knowing his family's history, and believes it's important for young people to know more about their past.

"So many students I meet are not concerned with history," he said. "I go to this reunion because it's a family tradition."
