wears a crown." But if one pig burns his nose the rest will follow suit. Sure. Flag day at Layton was an event. Every flag was flying on Oct. 31st, and Old Glory was strongly in evidence. H. E. Montross and J. J. Van Sickle made especially good displays. The pig dog farmer did not seem to be in it for some reason. Perhaps he lost his patriotism when he changed his politics. If so it would be a sorry exchange.

The day of the campaign button has at last passed away. It had a great run though, and cropped out in many ridiculous forms. The mottoes covered every conceivable idea in candidates, policies, and popular fads of the day, but the one discovered by C. B. in Milford under peculiar circumstances is said to be the most novel in design.

Will Clark, of Hainesville, is said to have secured a position in Wannamaker's New York store. This is the store built by A. T. Stewart and last occupied by Hilton, Hughes & Co.

The most shop of our jolly butcher came near being burglarized last Sunday night. A neighbor returning from helping to lay out the dead about midnight, saw a dim light in the shop, suspecting thieves he approached on tiptoe in company with the proprietor's wife and carefully opened the door. The supposed burglars were discovered in tabernacle, apparently taking account of stock. There appeared to be no meat missing, but someone got away right quick.

Learning that the mistake of our Democratic boss is an accurate political barometer, we carefully noticed that election morning both points indicated either ear with excitement. Toward night one point remained erect, but the other had drooped toward the left vest pocket. After the votes were counted both points directed toward his patent leathers, and indicated a very decided fall in his political temperature.

THE MILFORD LYCEUM ASSOCIATION Will the Community Consent to Its Disolution?

The recent burning of the library building deprived the directors of the Milford Lyceum Association of their ordinary place of meeting, but their regular monthly meeting was held on Monday of this week, with most of the board present. The disaster which has befallen the association is a serious one, the property lost without insurance amounting to two hundred and fifty or three hundred dollars; those in charge, however, are not disposed to abandon their undertaking, and confidently appeal to the public for assistance in setting it upon its feet again.

The regret expressed by so many at the loss of the library is evidence of a more general interest in the work of the association than had been supposed to exist. The truth is that the last season was the best in the entire history of the association, and the indications are not few that it has been gradually rooting itself in the esteem of the people.

The ordinary course of an enterprise of this sort in Milford has been to start out with flying colors; after a few months of apparent prosperity to suffer decline, and then to die from apathy. The time came in the history of the Lyceum Association when this peril seemed imminent but, persistent nursing saved it some little progress has since been made and but for this last cruel blow its experience might have been henceforth one of growth and prosperity.

A step was taken not long since which seemed to have much promise in it. The Milford Chautauqua Circle was invited to connect itself with the association as its library department, receiving in return the free use of the library, and the privilege of the association room for its meetings, when this should be desired; and this invitation was heartily accepted. There is reason to believe this may lead to union of effort on the part of all those who seek the elevation of the community in intelligence and culture.

It is proposed by the Directors to begin at once the gathering of a new library, and all who are interested are invited to contribute money or books for this purpose. The Sawkill House has been offered as a temporary place of deposit for these books. Miss Betty Cornelius, one of the Directors, will receive and care for them; and also such books of the library as are now in the hands of borrowers. Those having such books in their possession will please return them to her at their earliest convenience.

The Directors have in hand a considerable sum of money which they desire to increase by subscription, and which will be applied, in their judgment, to the purchase of books. One of the hotels of the place has been kindly offered for an entertainment for the benefit of the Association, of which more definite announcement will be made later. The question of a permanent location for the library must of course await developments, but with the community heartily interested in maintaining an institution of this character, this question must eventually receive a satisfactory solution.

Undoubtedly the ashes of the burned building might be raked over for evidences of mistake on the part of the Directors. They regret their mistakes sincerely. At the same time they hope that the community will do the wiser thing by giving a hearty encouragement and support to the work of the Association in the future. DIRECTOR
