WASHINGTON LETTER.

President McKinley For General Tracy.

The Reciprocity Treaties—Justice Field's Resignation—Senator Gorman's Withdrawal—Sale of the Union Pacific Railroad. That President McKinley is in favor of Gen. Tracy, the only regular Republican candidate for Mayor of New York City, is now known to all the world, as it was to your correspondent when he told your readers that such was the case.

Nothing but commendation has been heard of President McKinley's selection of Hon. John A. Kasson, of Iowa, to be a Special Commissioner of the United States with plenary powers to negotiate reciprocity treaties with other governments in accordance with the provisions of the Dingley tariff act.

There was no surprise at the publication of the tender of Justice Field's resignation from the U. S. Supreme Court, and of President McKinley's acceptance thereof, to take effect Dec. 1, 1897. The fact is generally known that Justice Field would have retired during the last administration—he has been eligible for retirement under the age limit nearly eleven years—but for his disinclination to give Mr. Cleveland an opportunity to appoint his successor, and he announced last year to his friends his intention to retire early in the present administration.

Senator Gorman's latest bluff, offering to withdraw as a candidate for reelection and to give up the leadership of the Maryland Democrats, if the publisher of the Baltimore Sun would agree to take the leadership and stop fighting the Gorman machine, is so transparent that it has furnished nothing but amusement for the Republicans. Gorman knows that the next Maryland legislature is almost bound to be Republican, and he is anxious to unload the responsibility for defeat on somebody, and he preferred Mr. Abel, of the Sun, who has for years been his most influential enemy inside the Democratic party, to anybody else.

Those who started that story about President McKinley intending to stop the sale of the Union Pacific Railroad overlooked the fact that the sale was ordered by a decree of the United States Circuit Court. The only thing that could have stopped the sale would have been an appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court, and that the Government decided some time ago not to take.

A flouring mill in our town didn't advertise, said an Iowa editor. The proprietor, in passing one day, said he wanted to sell me some flour. I told him I wanted to sell him some advertising. 'Oh,' he said, 'there is no need of my advertising. Everybody knows the mill is there.' In leaving he asked me if I knew where he could get a good cat. The next week a line appeared in the paper, 'Wanted, good cats at the mill.' In a few days he came in and said he wished I would tell the people no more cats were wanted at the mill.

PRINCETON'S "INN."

How the Gentleman With a Bar on his Tail Prospered.

The devil has always had a reputation, and we believe deservedly, as a character, who possesses large and varied resources and wonderful novelty in the execution of his plans. He has heretofore frequently startled the world with some bold, brilliant scheme, which has commended itself to the thoughtful consideration of good men, such as ministers of the gospel, college professors and even some of the 'Higher Critics.'

The prohibition papers and others raised a storm as was expected, about this 'Inn-Saloon,' and here it seemed as though the devil made the strike of his life, when he inspired a man from New Jersey, to defend the saloon on the ground that he had heard two of the students, over their beer, seriously discussing 'The Attributes of Deity under Anthropomorphic Limitations.'

Now, Princeton, a bear garden is not the best institution to teach real genuine piety. It may be a fairly good place in which to talk theology but even there, we imagine it would be the theology of the modern B. Fay Mills, rather than that of old John Hall, Princeton, don't misunderstand yourself into the belief that you're able to cope with the 'gifted but unprincipled enemy of souls' all alone. He is too much for you.

We would make a suggestion to you, Princeton, that whenever you see an attempt to carry forward the Master's kingdom by means on which the devil has a patent and sole monopoly, look out for sooner or later he will foreclose and take the property. The trouble is you have been depending too much of late on the influence of 'fool-ball' for your moral support and it is not enough.

The above article was written by Mr. M. Cady for the Phi Gamma 4 paper published in Dubuque Iowa, of which he is the Editor. Mr. Cady 'swung the birch' in the old academy here in 1868, and is now a prosperous lawyer as well as an editor in that city.

Fall Tree Planting.

The cool, even temperature of the autumn makes it the best season to plant many kind of trees and shrubs. This may be done any time before the frost locks up the earth. Forest trees do better when planted in the fall than in the spring. Upon an acre of poor land a grove of fine young maples might be set that would in time repay an hundred fold their cost. A few fruit trees could be set out each fall, according as there was time, and all these together properly tended would in a few years develop into a grand orchard.

Birthday anniversaries are beautifully marked by the planting of a fine tree. More birthdays seem somehow to come in the autumn than at any other time of the year, so there is opportunity to commemorate many of these happy occasions by a monument which will last for centuries. In choosing trees to plant, those which thrive in the neighborhood should be selected. Japan evergreens are beautiful features of the landscape, winter and summer, and grow almost anywhere. Thrifty, slim young growths of all kinds should be selected. They will develop faster than larger trees and be more symmetrical. A young tree should in every case be cultivated with care as a cabbage, planted in rich soil and watched and tended.

Housewives who are pushed for time should boil their potatoes with their 'jackets' on oftener, and if 'John' kids show him the following by Tillie May Forney, in the Woman's Home Companion. In the course of a year it would also prove to be an item of economy, especially this year, to those who have to look after their dimes and nickles, as there is much more waste in peeling potatoes before they are cooked, than afterwards.

POTATOES BOILED IN THEIR JACKETS.

I never see potatoes dry baked, hard-mashed and watery boiled, appearing in monotonous daily routine (for even the established rules of cooking them are too often slighted) that I do not feel like crying out against injustice. In reality the potato is the most admirable of vegetables. It requires only a little care to make it palatable at all seasons, and it adapts itself to fancy dress as successfully as did Cinderella herself under the touch of the fairy wand.

Not long ago I was surprised to hear a man, an epicure in a way, express himself in this wise at a small dinner: 'Why is it the houses of the poor always provide the best boiled potatoes?' In great houses the vegetable is served either boiled to the consistency of damp leather, else hard as a cannon ball. 'He went on to tell how often as a child he went to visit a neighboring poor woman. She was devoted to children and instead of sweet cakes she invariably handed out hot, delightfully cooked potatoes. 'Those were boiled potatoes,' he went on, 'with no other accompaniment than salt an emperor might have dined upon them; large, mealy, boiled all through and in their jackets.' The latter phrase answered his first question. Possibly from knowledge, poor woman cooked her potatoes 'in their jackets,' and consequently or unconsciously she struck the keynote of their success. Nature has ordered that the skin of the potato be made of a corky nature to retain the juices and nourishing properties of the vegetable. These are lost when the skin, or envelope, is taken off. A chemical analysis shows that the water in which was boiled a pound of peeled potatoes contained seventeen grains of carbonate of potash. All that nourishment the 'jackets' would have secured to the vegetable. Again, analysis shows a peeled potato takes three and one-half hours to digest. A potato baked in the skin ordinarily digests in two hours.'

Country Store Advertising.

Country store advertising is improving, and as it improves it grows more and more interesting and all the better for the interest it excites. It was formerly of little consequence, because country storekeepers took little interest in this department of their own business. The advertising was unpopular, was neglected and regarded as a bore, because it was considered an expense rather than a source of profit. Shrewd men have taken the advertising expense account from the blacklist it formerly occupied and put it in the light, so that we can plainly see just what its value is and its probable and profitable returns. Money is now spent not grudgingly, as formerly, but freely and voluntarily and in some instances lavishly. That none may be thrown away the quality of country store advertising should be carefully considered and every help toward goodness adopted.—Dry Goods Chronicle.
