LAND WITHOUT STRIKES.

A Law Which Has Been Remarkably Successful in New Zealand.

New Zealond has anticipated the rest of the world by enacting a law which deals an rationally with all trade disputes that it has actully provented strikes for the last five years. It is impossible to present more than an outline of the plan.

Impossible to present more than an outline of the plan.

Both sectations of employers and the trade unions may be incorporated. Those which are chartered or registered choose the members of their own board and also the members of the court to which disputes are referred. Whether organized or not, the associations and trade unions are subject to the law.

The colony of New Zealand is divided into industrial districts, for each of which there is a conciliation board elected for three years. It consists of two persons chosen by registered employers; two by registered trade unions, and one disinterested person elected by the four, who is chairman. When a dispute srises between employers and the men in their employ, either party may refer the matter in dispute to the district board, which has full authority to investigate the facts and to command a settlement. In case either party will not accept the docision the matter is referred to the State court. This consists of one person representing the trade unions, one the employers, and a chairman, a Judge of the supreme court, appointed by the Governor. The court has a three years' term and is wisely independent of politics.

A decision by tale court in final and must be accepted under a penalty for violation not exceeding £500, or $2,500. Moreover, when a dispute—a been referred to the conciliation hoard, and until it is finally settled, a strike or lockout is illegal.

That there have been about fifty cases referred to district boards or to the court in the past five years, that during that time there has neither attrike nor lockout is allegal.

cases referred to district boards or to the court in the past five years, that during that time there has neither strike nor lockout in New Zealand, and that in every case the decision has been accepted by both parties, seems to prove either that the law is excellent, or that it is excellently administered. Perhaps it demonstrates both propositions. The necessity for the passage of a similar law in this country is to apparent to require argument. Aside from the interests of the employers and the employed, the greater interests of the general public demand it.—Youth's Companion.

IN SOUTH AFRICA.

How the British Care for the Wounded Soldiers.

Modern artillery's effectiveness has put a very different complexion upon the uses and necessities of field hospitals. A field hospital used to be very near the fighting line—it was often actually under fire. But now ackays, when artillery fire is commonly effective at four thousand yards, so field hospital—id be allowed sufficiently near the _hting line to permit of the wounded being taken directly to it, and the organization of ald has been altogether altered.

In South Africa it has been arranged that all the effective aid in the field will be that of the Army Medical Corps. Voluntary aid will confine it self to the lines of communication between the field and the base hospital and between the hase and general hospitals. The working organization is as follows:—

Accompanying the fighting line are Modern artillery's effectiveness has Accompanying the fighting line are the bearer companies of the Army Medical Corps—three or four men to sach regular regimental company. When a man drops out wounded, the Army Medical Corps men pick him up and take him to the nearest dressing station, where he is attended to raquickly as possible. From the dressing station the wounded are taken to collecting stations, these being placed at points where more shelter is obtain-in the case of collecting stations; it is possible, of course, to select more effective shelter than at the dressing stations, where shelter is more a matter of improvisation. From the collecting stations the wounded are partied as quickly as possible to the held hospital. Here, generally speaking, they remain a day, and are then removed to the base hospital.

There will be twelve field hospitals

n South Africa, four stationary or base hospitals and four general hosolitais, each with its complete staff. The distribution of these hospitals will be determined by the officers commanding in South Africa, and must lepend on the manner in which the dilitary situation develops.

Tyrolese Courting.

When a young Tyrolese goes accounting in carnest he carries with alm a bottle of wine, of which he pours out a portion and presents it to the object of his affection.

If she accepts it the whole affair is settled. Very often the girl has not made up her mind, and then she will take refinge in excuses, so as not to frink the wine, and yet not refuse it point blank, for that is considered a gross insult, proving that she has been merely trifling with the affections of her lover. She will, for instance, maintain that the wine "looks your" or that wine "disagreess with sour," or that wine "diangrees with her." In fact she makes use of any subterfuge that presents itself at the moment.

Shy lovers, loth to make sure of their case beforehand, find it a very happy inspiration. Not a word need be spoken, and the girl is spared the painful "No" of civilization.

A Lost River.

A Lost River,

One of the most remarkable freaks of nature occurs in Mexico. It is a river that is not a river. The bed of it lies in a valley between the Rio Grande and Pecos Rivers. It is not a dead or dried-up stream. It is simply lost. Numerous big tributaries flow into it from the neighboring mountains. Immediately, however, they reach the bed of the main stream they disappear from sight. Thus, for some reach the bed of the main stream they disappear from eight. Thus, for some reason or another a river, which should be 300 miles in length, has no existence which could be proved.

"Heart, your honor! where would an agent get a heart?" exclaimed Bill "I see your honor does not know him; hesides, he has an eye on the farm this long time for a fosterer of his own; so I expect ne mercy at all, at all, only to be turned out."

"Take this, my poer fellow, take this," said the stranger, pouring a purse full of gold into Bill's old hat, which in his grief he had flung on the ground. "Pay the fellow your rent but I'll take care it shall do him no good. I remember the time when things went otherwise in this country, when I would have hung up such a fellow in the twinkling of an eye!"

These words were lost upon Bill, who was insensible to everything but the sight of gold, and before he could unfix his gaze, and lift up his head to pour out his hundred thousand blessings, the stranger was gone. The beings, the stranger was gone. The be-wildered peasant looked around in search of his benefactor, and at last he thought he saw him riding on a white horse a long way off on the lake.

"O'Donoghue, O'Donoghue!" shouted Bill: "the good, the blessed O'Donoghue." and he ran expering like a madman to show Judy the gold, and to rejoice her heart with the prospect of wealth and happiness.

The next day Bill proceeded to the agent's; not sneakingly, with his hat in his hand, his eyes fixed on the ground, and his knees bending under him; but bold and upright, like a man

"Why don't you take off your hat, fellow? don't you know you are speaking to a magistrate?" said the agent.

"I know I'm not speaking to the king, sir," said Bill; "and I never take off my hat but to them I can respect and love. The Eye that sees all knows I have no right either to resknows I have no right either to res-for you shall not remain another hour in possession.

"There is your rent," said Bill, with an unmoved expression of tone and countenance; "you'd better count it, and give me a receipt in full for the running gale and all.

The agent gave a look of amazement at the gold; for it was gold—real guineas! and not bits of dirty ragged small notes, that are only fit to light one's pipe with. However willing the agent may have been to ruin, as he thought, the unfortunate tenant, he took up the gold, and handed the receipt to Bill who strutted off with it, as proud as a cat of her whiskers.

The agent, going to his desk shortly after, was confounded at beholding a heap of gingerbread cakes instead of the money he had deposited there. He heap of gingerbread cakes instead of the money he had deposited there. He raved and swore, but all to no pur-pose; the gold had become ginger-bread cakes; just marked like the guineas, with the king's head, and Bill had the receipt in his pocket; so he saw there was no use in saying any-thing about the affair, as he would on-ly get laughed at for his pains. From that hour Bill Doody grew rich; all his undertakings prespered; and he often blesses the day that he met with O'Donoghue, the great prince that lives down under the Lake of Killarney.

BILL DOODY'S RENT INVING'S WAY WITH CALLERS.

Story of a Man Whom He Scared

"Oh ollagone, ulligone! this is a wide world, but wint will we do in it or where will we go?" muttered Bill Doody, as he sat on a rock by the Lake of Killarny. What will we do? To-morrow's rentslay, and Tim the Driver swears if we don't jay up our rent, he'll ent't every ha-porth we have; and then, sure enough, there's Judy and myself, and the poor little grawis (children) will be turned out to starve on the high road, for the never a half-penny of rent have !!. Oh hone, that I should live to see this day!"

Thus did Bill Doody bemean his hard faire, pouring his surrows to the reckless waves of the most beautiful lakes, which seemed to mock his ariser; as they rejoiced beneath the cloudiess sky of a May morning. That lake, which he seemed to mock his nuiser; as they rejoiced beneath the cloudiess sky of a May morning. That lake, giftering in sunshine, sprinked with fairy Islands of toek and verdure, and bounded by glant kills of ever-varying hore, might, with its magic beauty, charm all sadness but despair; for alas.

"How ill the scene that offers rest And hearth that cannot rest agree."

Yet Bill Doody was not so desolate as he supposed; there was one listening to tim he little thought of; help was at hand from a quarter he could not have expected.

"What's the matter with you, my poor man?" said a fall, perily-looking gentleman, at the same time stepping out of a furze-brake. Now Bill was sested on a rock that commanded the view of a large field. Nothing in the field could be concealed from him except this furze-brake, which grew in a hollow near the margin of the lake. He was, therefore, not a little surprised at the gentleman's sudden appearance, and began to question whether the personage before him belonged to this world or yot. He, however, soon mustered courage sufficient to tell him how his crops had falled how some bad member had charmed away his butter, and how Tim the farm if he diin't pay up every penny of the rent by twelve o'clock next day.

"A said story, indeed," said the stranger; "but surely, if you represented the case to your landiord's agent, he wen't have the heart to turn you out."

They are Pettus of Alabama, who is seventy-eight years old; Cockrell, of Missouri, who is sixty-five; Vest, also of Missouri, who is verging on seventy, and Morgan, of Alabama, who will be seventy-six next June.

Age has dealt lightly with these four old men, with the exception of Senator Vest, who is beginning to give evidence of the weight of three score

Senator Vest, who is beginning to give evidence of the weight of three score years and ten upon his diminutive form. He is known as the Confucius of the Senate, because he looks so wise and so deliberate in his talk. Cockrell is one of the hardest workers in the Senate, and his constant watchfulness while bills are being considered is proverbial. Vest used to be one of the greatest orators and debaters in the body, though of late he has participated but little in the proceedings. Morgan is one of the wise men of the Senato. He knows everything about everything. When everything about everything. he was a boy and books were the used to train his memory by ing to repeat each volume, a chapter at a time. A Priceless Volume.

About four years ago a London blacksmith noticed on a secondhand bookstall a very old book priced at two cents. He bought it, and, after attempting to read it, threw it aside and soon forgot it. One of his lodgers happening to see the book recently, and, noticing that it was dated 1450 asked permission to show it to the British Museum authorities. A day or two later the blacksmith was requested to call, and the Secretary, to his surprise, asked him what he would take for the book. In some slight confusion the man said, "What will you give?" "Will $250 suit you?" was the answer of the Secretary. The blacksmith was so dumbfounded that the Secretary thought he was ridiculing his offer, and therefore immediately increased to $500, which was at once accepted. Sooner than have lost the book, however, which was the first book that Guttenberg ever printed, and, therefore almost priceless, the Museum authorities would have paid almost any turn that had been asked. paid almost any sum tha' had been asked.
