SANDYSTON.

The Fourth of July has come and gone and very little celebrating was done in town. A few couples joined in a ride, others visited Brookside Park but the majority were at work on the farm.

Harvest has commenced but the recent high winds and rain has tangled it very much. Haying is also going ahead, but work is much hindered from want of help.

Our roads are being worked and on some pieces of road much fault is being found as the condition of the road is worse than before repairs were made. The crosser hands in his order worked out and the Committee ignorant of how the work has been done accepted the order. The Committee should go over the town and see for themselves before accepting any order.

During the thunder storm on Thursday the barn buildings on the farm of Joseph C. Warner, just above Hainesville, were struck by lightning and burned. A few loads of hay were in the barns and some farm implements.

Our B. of E. met on Saturday evening and hired teachers for the Evans and Tattle corner school. Miss Alice Ravnage secured the former school and Miss McCormick the latter. One of the trustees and a patron had a brilliant discussion and the ten commandments were not strictly adhered to in the discussion. But it was just adjusting a fire loss by a good deal.

Centerville has enjoyed a period of quiet for some time and the cyclone storm center appears in the neighborhood of Hainesville, and although the cyclone is frequent, nobody so far has been seriously damaged but the pitcher goes once too often sometimes.

William Moore a veteran of the 27 N. J. Infantry died here some time ago, and inquiry finds no relatives. He left some personal effects to which they are entitled, especially his discharge.

I notice in the county press the death of Col. Wm. E. Morford, formerly of Newton. He was at one time an officer in the 1st N. J. Cav. and well do I remember enlisting with him on Feb. 1, 1862 and I think his office was where the Loscy bakery is situated and it seems as if it was only a few days ago.

A mail inspector passed over this mail route last week to examine into the proposed new direct line from Branchville to Dingmans Pa. From what he told Mr. Watson, the present carrier of the mail, if any new route is started, it will be from Layton to Dingman. He also told Mr. Watson that his time of departure from Branchville would be fixed by the arrival of the mail train, thus getting the mail to Layton before 2 p. m.

Richard Kent, of Bloomfield N. J. drove from that place to that of Harry Bensley, on Tuesday last arriving here about the middle of the afternoon. I don't know the distance but it is a long drive.

Well the Presidential candidates are nominated and the people can take their choice. There is one paragraph in the Democratic platform that a majority of the voters would like to see carried out, and that is the election of the U. S. Senators by popular vote. As it is to-day only a millionaire can get there and sometimes a crooked stick, at that.

John A. Deaks of Newark, came up with his family on Wednesday for his summer vacation. His family will stay near Dingman for the summer and he will return in a fortnight to his duties on the front end of a trolley car. Al is looking fine.

Some of our people, carting to and from Branchville, are rambling at the condition of the Frankford end of the turnpike road. Our end is in good order, and if Mr. Steffen would extend his drawing of gravel, we would have the best road in the county.

On Thursday last I was surprised to find that I could talk over the Sussex wires from our private local wire. The Sussex people could not work their line from here on account of our wire being in contact. Looking along my wire I found them crossed directly in front of my door and with a fish pole I soon had them separated and both lines were free.

Dayton Debus had a cow struck by lightning in the storm of Wednesday night. The cow was standing by the lightning rod at the end of the barn and the singular part of it is, that the rod was broken into three pieces and thrown about the yard.

JAMAICA GINGER DRINKING.

Results From Its Use in Maine as a Substitute for Liquor.

No Maine woodsman has been killed by liquor recently, but four have killed themselves by drinking the contents of a bottle labeled "Jamaica Ginger." A few weeks ago the bodies of Horace T. Gardner and Clinton Gardner, brothers, were found in a camp near Machias. The stomachs of the men were sent to Bowdoin College for examination and on the report of the analyst a coroner's jury decided that the men came to their death from drinking a mixture, put up as the labels on the bottles state, by the Hoyt Medicine Company, of Boston, and purporting to be Jamaica ginger. Upon analysis, this "ginger" was found to be composed of alcohol and capsicum, or red pepper, with only a slight trace of ginger.

A few days ago two woodsmen in a camp near Tetton, Penobscot county, were taken sick with chills, and, no liquor being at hand, they bought from the "wangan," or camp store, a supply of so-called Jamaica ginger. The more they drank of the stuff the more they wanted, and soon their condition became so alarming that a man was sent to the nearest town for a physician. One of the men died in agony long before the physician arrived and the other is still dead in a critical condition. The woodsmen say the sufferings of the two men were frightful. They clawed at the floor and sides of the camp, and frothed at the mouth in their frenzy, while one of them begged his companions to take an axe and knock him on the head, or to cut him open to see what it was that was burning him up.

Vast quantities of this so-called Jamaica ginger are taken into the wood camps every winter by the "wangan" keepers and sold to the men at a dollar a bottle, the retail price at Bangor and elsewhere being generally twenty-five cents. When the men are sick they take it, and often when they desire liquor they drink the ginger as a substitute. It is sold all over Maine in large quantities, especially in those sections where the prohibitory liquor law is enforced. In Lewiston, a favorite drink, called "Lincoln Street Split," is made by pouring two small bottles of this ginger into a six-quart pail of old cider. No whiskey or imitation of whiskey ever made could equal the effect of this mixture. It is worse than Russian vodka, and plain alcohol is mild compared with it. In many country towns the sale of this ginger connection is causing havoc among the young men, who deem it less harmful than liquor simply because it is not classed as such, and because the law does not forbid its sale.
