OLD RUINS HIS DELIGHT.

Famous Swedish Explorer Who Has Made Valuable Discoveries in Ancient Cities.

The Swedish explorer, Dr. Sven Hedin, has made valuable additions to the present-day knowledge of ancient peoples and their homes. He is now on his second tour of exploration in the least known parts of central Asia. He is not only distinguished as an ardent scholar in archeology and philology, but he is a geologist, an astronomer, a zoologist, a botanist, a geographer, a surveyor and a competent artist, while at the same time he holds the pen of a ready and skillful writer, says a London exchange. His accomplishments are so many, so varied and so remarkable that none of the titles ordinarily applied to men of learning, merit, science, his natural history collections, as well as his other collections made in the Indies, are of exceptional value.

Dr. Sven Hedin was thoroughly and admirably prepared for his exploring work before he began it. It was more than 12 months ago that he set out from Kashgar on his second tour, and it was his design to get back to Europe early in the present year, after he had explored the sources of the Indus.

It is already known that, rich as were the results of his former journeys, they have been surpassed by those of a more recent time, and the record of them will undoubtedly be of extraordinary interest. He has collected not only the tales and traditions, but also many relics of the ruined cities he has seen.

It was at Dr. Hedin's suggestion that the viceroy of India, Lord Curzon, made his visit a few months ago to the ruins of the city of Rajapur, in the province of Bombay, for the purpose of examining the historic architecture of ancient India. Though the city is less known than almost any other Mohammedan ruins, it is said to excel them all in beauty, some of the edifices having been even grander than the Alhambra of Spain. It was once renowned for its palaces, temples, towers, minarets and walls, at the sight of which, an inscription declares, "Heaven itself wondered." But the horde of Marathas fell upon it at its most brilliant period, played havoc with its glories, reduced it to desolation and slew multitudes of its inhabitants, though it had a population of more than a million.

When the region and the place were brought directly under British rule, about half a century ago, there were but a few thousand wretched people at Rajapur, and Lord Curzon found during his recent visit that the remaining parts of some of the most splendid palaces and tombs had been "fixed up" so as to adapt them for use as jails, courts and government offices. "The spider," so sang the poet of old, "weaves its web on the tomb of Yussuf; the owl stands sentry there."

When Lord Curzon visited the ruins, which Dr. Sven Hedin had previously known of, he expressed the hope that it might yet be in his power to do something to restore the name and promote the revival of the desolated city of Rajapur, once renowned as the "queen city of the Deccan." And already the restorers are ready for such service as they can render.

"That was the time," Rivers went on to say, "that I was drowned, to all intents and purposes. The doctors, by hard work, brought me to." "Any cause assigned for their rash act?" asked Brooks.—Chicago Tribune.

A WORTHY SUCCESSOR.

"Something New Under the Sun."
All doctors have tried to cure CATARRH by the use of powders, acid gases, inhalers and drugs in paste form. Their powders dry up the mucous membranes causing them to crack open and bleed. The powerful acids used in the inhalers have entirely eaten away the same membranes that their makers have aimed to cure, while pastes and ointments cannot reach the disease. An old and experienced practitioner who has for many years made a close study and specialty of the treatment of CATARRH, has at last perfected a Treatment which when faithfully used, not only relieves at once, but permanently cures CATARRH, by removing the cause, stopping the discharges, and curing all inflammation. It is the only remedy known to science that actually reaches the afflicted parts. This wonderful remedy is known as "SNUFFLES" the GUARANTEED CATARRH CURE and is sold at the extremely low price of One Dollar, each package containing internal and external medicine sufficient for a full month's treatment and everything necessary to its perfect use.

"SNUFFLES" is the only perfect CATARRH CURE ever made and is now recognized as the only safe and positive cure for that annoying and disgusting disease. It cures all inflammation quickly and permanently and is also wonderfully quick to relieve HAY FEVER or COLIC in the HEAD.
CATARRH when neglected often leads to CONSUMPTION—"SNUFFLES" will save you if you use it at once. It is no ordinary remedy, but a complete treatment which is positively guaranteed to cure CATARRH in any form or stage if used according to the directions which accompany each package. Don't delay but send for it at once, and write full particulars as to your condition, and you will receive special advice from the discoverer of this wonderful remedy regarding your case without cost to you beyond the regular price of "SNUFFLES" the "GUARANTEED CATARRH CURE."
Sent prepaid to any address in the United States or C. O. D. on receipt of One Dollar. Address Dept. H 275, EDWIN B. GILES & COMPANY, 2229 and 2232 Market Street, Philadelphia.

WHERE THE SUN SHINES.

Down at my Aunt Priscilla's where I often go to stay. The sun is always shining bright, no matter what the weather. It may be pouring torrents, out-of-doors, from cloudy skies. The sun is always shining in my Aunt Priscilla's eyes. No wonder that the neighbors say, when Aunt Priscilla smiles, "she always makes the world look bright, and drives away the pains."

But when to Aunt Katrina's house I go to spend a week, she is so very fussy that I hardly dare to speak. She scolds the servants all the time and tells me I'm a nuisance. She never lets her waiters do one thing that they please. It's very cloudy all the day when Aunt Katrina's party. The merry sunshines never comes—I believe not once a year.

That something's wrong is very plain; to stay and grow up, with their's time, like Aunt Priscilla Fry. I'll keep the corners of my mouth turned up to smile at the street. That all the people, young and old, I meet upon the street will be as bright as brighter just because that little boy has shown, in greeting every one, a heart so full of joy.

The House - of Five Daughters

By Ethelyn Leslie Huston.

IF BRUCE SHERMAN had taken a carriage to his club on "Ladies' Night," as other properly brought up young men with large incomes did, the story might have been different. But Sherman was a thicket, and proud of it. He was quite certain that he did not turn the avenue upon which Dean's house stood, while other thoroughbreds earned at least part of their oats doing stunts in front of clubs and theaters.

So it happened that "Ladies' Night" found Mr. Sherman taking a route to his club that led him eight blocks out of the way, just because he liked it. He was quite certain that he did not turn the avenue upon which Dean's house stood, while other thoroughbreds earned at least part of their oats doing stunts in front of clubs and theaters.

The certain Miss Dean of whom he was thinking was standing under the chandelier in all the glory of rose satin and pearls. Near her, sitting in front of the big fireplace, was the second Miss Dean. She was gowned in a loose, clinging gown of some neutral tint, the last living of a wealthy family, felt an odd sort of a lonely sensation, lying its weight upon his immaculate shirt front. There was no legitimate reason in the world for this, as the majority of the beautiful women of his world were not only willing but anxious that he should never be lonely again. For what was he, a young man of white satin and seed-pearls whenever he bent over their dance-cards. But Sherman wanted a little sympathy in a vague sort of way just at that particular moment, and the thought of the brilliantly lit clubhouse and gorgeously attired throng did not appeal to him.

He hesitated a moment uncertainly, then deliberately turned back, and in at the low iron gate, and rang the bell of the Dean residence.
It was the odd Miss Dean who opened it, and looked at him with a touch of surprise in her calm, dark eyes. She held a book in her left hand, with one finger still between the leaves to keep her place, which was sufficient evidence that she was waiting, and the place for social favorites was, consequently, where they belonged. And that was not the quiet library of the Dean home.

This fact did not trouble Mr. Sherman, however, who only bowed his tall head and followed his hostess into the front room, holding his crush hat under his arm as he drew off his gloves.
"Am I disturbing you?" he asked, tranquilly, after he was settled in a deep chair facing the fire. "If I am I will go away. But please say I am not."
The dark eyes smiled through their shadow of habitual gravity, and he thought of dusk pools lying still and unfeathered under the stars. The young women of the monde, who were watching the door with some impatience at the club and wondering where he was, would have assured him of their intense delight at any interruption of his, but this strange woman, instead, regarded him with a faint touch of curiosity and asked, quietly: "What whim has impelled you to turn apostate?"
He leaned forward with his elbows on his knees and watched the crumbling of a pine knot, outlined in palpitating scarlet, and after it had settled into a glowing mass of embers, he turned and looked at the woman beside him.
"I've rarely stood looking at you through the palms of your concertina, and as I looked at you and your wood fire, I suddenly grew tired of the world, the flesh, and the devil. I hoped you would be a good Samaritan and take me in."
Leaning over, he gently took the book from her fingers.
"Will you let me see what I have interrupted? 'Epictetus'—what do you need of his philosophy?" He looked at her with sudden keenness. She returned the look steadily.
"We all need philosophy, sometimes, do we not?" she answered. "Even your world failed to content you tonight."
"And yours?" he asked, slowly.
"Mine?" She looked into the fire with her little inscrutable smile. "Mine takes me from the flesh and the devil to the immortals. But I am human still, and I cannot always endure the altitude."
"The gods, too, are not content?" he asked, with an eagerness he did not himself understand. She lifted her eyebrows thoughtfully and was silent. Then she turned to him with a gleam of amusement in her eyes.
"Happiness, they say, is not to be unhappy. Is it the same with content? I have no reason to be discontented. I have as much as most people, and more than many. And our Sunday school teaches us that we should be grateful that we are not as those less fortunate—which favors of the Pharisees, by the way. But—"
"Yes?" he was watching her intently as she drew her straight brows together in a troubled little frown. She had forgotten him, and was staring into the bed of coals with eyes that saw the city beyond her gate, and a great weariness came into them.
"No, I am not content," she said, slowly. "For I see and hear. And my wrists are tied. The lives of working-women are so hard, the struggle is so pitiful—it is all so hideously unjust. And I can do so little."
He saw that she was forgotten, that the thoughts of this woman beside him were far from him and his world of light and laughter and song, and he watched her in silence. Soon she lifted her head with a sharp little sigh, and he turned his gaze to the small gray book in her hand.
"Will you tell me something of them?" he asked, gently. And with her dark eyes on the dying embers, the slender white hands clasping her knees as she leaned forward and saw in the living crimson and dead gray of the the shirt."

And at the club the second Miss Dean and a bevy of debutantes waited, and waited in vain.
The little, shadowy library, with its flickering fire and low, deep chairs before it, grew to know him well that winter. And while his set danced and flirted and moved from opera box to grill room, Sherman talked in low tones to the still woman that he had looked at through the palms, and argued and disagreed and argued again, and ran the gamut from philosophy to poet.
And the next season the library knew them no more, for to the amusement and despair of the debutantes, the Sherman fortune and the Sherman name were accepted by the odd Miss Dean, whose lord not only tolerated, but showed an interest, in her philanthropies that left his intimates helplessly wondering. And he assured Mrs. Bruce that Bruce II. shall be a trained printer, as it was the walk on "Ladies' night" that showed him his loneliness and the remedy.

CHASING AFTER FIRES.

New Feature of the Insurance Business That Is Said to Pay Well.

The latest thing for fire insurance agents to do is to be on the spot looking for new business while old business is burning up. One of the canvassers of a New England company began to make money so rapidly a few months ago that some of his competitors tried to find out how he did it, says the New York Sun.
They learned that he made a specialty of following the fire engines, and if the fire happened to be in a tenement house or flat he waited until the flames were subdued and reaped a harvest by insuring the other tenants and neighbors. Most people are apt to be so badly scared by a fire near their home that if not insured they are glad to take out policies on the spot. It didn't take the other agents long to catch on, and it is said that the other day after a fire 21 agents wrote 70 policies in the immediate neighborhood.
"It is a great scheme," said one of these agents. "All one has to do is to hit the iron while it is hot. Don't talk insurance to any of the tenants or neighbors while the fire is going on, because they are likely to be too excited to think of anything but their personal safety. When everything is quieted down and the fire engines are going away is the time to jump in with your proposition. Of course, none of the larger companies permit agents to get business in this way, but there are countless small underwriters who never question the source from which an application comes so long as the risk is not unusual. This chasing after fires is one of the new wrinkles of the fire insurance business. A profitable one, too."
