HORSES IN SPRINGTIME.

Some Reasons Why They Should Ba Cared For, Instead of Regisored,

The weather at this season of the year is apt to be very changeable and the ground muddy. With March and April usually come a good many disagreeable days, which, with the frost leaving the ground and the sudden change, render it unhealthy for both man and beast, and I be-lieve that the horse comes in for a larger share of neglect, or suffers more from mismanagement, than any other animal, at this time.

The farm horse does not usually abed his winter coat until along in March or first part of April, and at this season, while his hair is long and thick, lively exercise causes him to sweat freely, and as the days get warm he is liable to be left without being covered while the air is really cold, and the necessity for blanket-ing while standing after exercise is fully as great as in the middle of the winter. It is in the warm, springlike days when dampness arises from the approach of the glowing sun, while snow is yet on the ground or in the air, that man and beast "take cold," rather than in the seven cold days of January.

When the horse stands exposed to the cold winds the neck, chest and hack should be covered; but how common it is to see horses, wet with sweat, hitched to the fence, and if covered at all, with an apology for a blanket, short at both ends, the chances are that the driver is comfortably seated indoors; and then perhaps after standing in this way for two or three hours, he is driven me through the mud and placed in the stable without further attention. Horses that are hitched out of doors should be placed in sheltered positions, well blanketed and left to remain there no longer than neces-sary, and, after a drive through the mud, with a handful of straw or piece of sacking brush the mud from the legs and fetlocks, cover with a light blanket and shut all doors so as to keep out the draught.—Ohio Farmer.

Little Hay Goes a Long Way. fed in excessive amounts when they are upon the road or worked hard It is also without doubt a more fre quent cause of heaves and as to endanger the animal's life. At morning and noon only very little hay should be given with enough grain to keep up the strength and flesh of the horse, but at night a liberal amount of hay should be fed.— Lewis Olsen, in Farm and Home.

The Maturity of Hogs, Hogs vary to an astonishing degree as to the time in which they will mature. We hear yet of breeders that claim to have hogs that go on growing till they are five or six years old but of course breeding in modern times tends to eradicate this late maturing habit. Now most of our swine reach maturity in a little over a year and reach a marketable growth in ten months or less. For breeding animals it is advocated that the hogs be fed so that they will mature wouldly and make their worth ture rapidly and make their growth turing two years, it being argued that such hogs will have more vitality to transmit to their offspring.— Farmers' Review.
